A LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Highline College Thunder-Word
Seattle 8, Washington

A young gentleman attempt-ted to write an article in February 8, 1963 issue of the Thunder-Word about the Young Democrats Club. The only mention of the club is "I would be more aptly named 'Youth Democratic Club' and a rather poor organization." The rest of the article is about the student's lack of interest in developing a "Young Republicans Club" and a rather poorly-nut article on an old lady in Minnesota. I believe the article was written by Young Democrats and in the interest of the goal of our club.

In the issue of the "Young Democrats Club" of Highline
College to present the name of the Democratic Party and to represent Highline College at the various Democratic conven-sions and meetings in the state. I say that we are doing our duty. The "Young Democrats Club" is putting on an after-games dance March 2, 1963. The purpose of this dance is to promote the name of the Democratic Party and to acquaint more students with our organization at school.

We have also had various representatives at the various Democratic State board meeting and the State Convention.

Dear Editor, of the article attended one of our meetings. In covering our activities concerning the dance, the State Board meetings, the State Convention were presented to the members of the club. Therefore, I have asked the author of "Support Your Political Party" to write a blue report.

Creative Writing Class Presents Samples of Work

by Carol Hall, Instructor
Creative writers shape experience. They do not record what happened, they make things happen. Eager to express, their own ways of looking at life, they need an audience.

I selected the following sketches and poems as samples of what the creative writing class at Clifton College is beginning to do. Several promising stories had to be omitted because they were too lengthy for publication in The Thunder Word. Several other poems written for the class reveal poets learning to make words work for them.

There are more stories, sketches and poems where these came from.

Fish for Sale by Charles Day

Silly lady! I’ve got fish for sale
Take your pick; you choose what you take.
Even parts of a small whale
Like them at all, they seem to hate.
Look at them carefully now
These are to wet the Fisherman’s brow
I’ve fish for Friday.
There’s more for every day
Look at them, they are healthy
They are like a God’s gift
These are from the Bering Sea—
I’ve got digging, from seven
The big black one there.
It’s from the depths of hell
This fish is a mighty tell
It came from the waters of freezing temperature
These words behave as they command them to.

The big black one there.
Look at them all, I’ve got time
That one is from the Bering Sea
It’s from the depths of hell.
Phrases like these are like a God’s gift to me
These fish were caught in honest labor
Phrases like these are like a God’s gift to me.

Brrr! Brrr! The plane gained altitude and continued its journey down the long upstairs hallway with its mournful lurch and jolt

The Thunder-Word—Page 3

by Janice A. Schneekloth

The plane careened wildly over the white carpet past the etchig table and made a loop de loop in front of the family portrait. As it touched to the red and white plane was a small boy, his face pressed against one of his hands tightly gripping the footrest, his other hand holding the top of his form, his eyes which were determined to remain below his bouncing Formica.

“Brrr! Brrr!” The plane gained altitude and continued its journey down the long upstairs hallway with its mournful lurch and jolt.

“Brrr! Brrr!” The plane turned suddenly and entered the bedroom, but lost a wing as it went through the doorway.

The round-faced little urchin spun himself around and then collapsed in a heap on the floor. Tommy heard the water running in his bathroom.

What a silly time to take a bath. Jeez when I was told to play baseball? Picking myself off the floor I wandered aimlessly over to his brother’s bed and bounced myself upon him. I loved to hear the springs squeak. Besides his bed didn’t bounce good. A small dirty fingernail traced the outline of a horse on the spread and then he flipped himself over on his back. He lifted his leg up over his head and started to count the holes in his tennis shoes. A small white rose somewhere from the depths of a peanut-buttered sandwich. Someday maybe he would count to twenty. Maybe even a million. He was wishing about that as he sat up. He put his head between his legs and turned a somersault. Sometimes he fell off the end of the bed but not today. The feet, at the end of two very dirty ankles, touched the carpet and puddled over to the dresser. He still wasn’t tall enough to see the top.

“Thurs.” But he was vanished in and its place came a most little expression that comes with a childish discovery of what the drawer handles are really for. This was the best part of the room. His tongue peaked in and out of the toothless hole while his eyes gazed on Billie’s treasures. His hand passed over the manibles, gum-wrappers, pencils, paper clips and finally came to rest on, stack of cards. Billie had told him there were thirty pictures of baseball players and that he could have them someday. He didn’t see how anybody could have that many but Billie had said so, so he guessed there were.

The bathroom door opened. Jumping down from the dresser he dashed into the bathroom.

“Billie, play baseball with me.”

“Can’t, Pee. Wee.”

“I’m Dr. Atwood, remember?”

“Who?”

“Just someplace.”

Tommy climbed on top of the toilet seat and put his elbows on the white porcelain wash basin. Billie was certainly doing some silly things, he thought.

“Billie, what’cha doin’?”

“Nothing.”

“If you’re not doin’ nothing what’s the matter with you?”

“St’s after shave lotion and it doesn’t smell funny.”

“Did’cha have it?”

Tommy reached over and poured a little on his finger. It felt kind of tingly as he rubbed it off on his striped T-shirt. “It don’t bethin smell funny,” he thought to himself. His brother was certainly going to a lot of trouble. He must have brushed his hair for almost an hour. Besides, he used a awful lot of toothpaste.

“Billie!”

“Waat, Pee. Wee!”

“In the head of playing basketball with me?”

“Can’t go with you!”

“Course not.”

“Why?”

“’Cause.”

“Can’t?”

“’Cause I’m go’in out with a girl.”

“Why not?”

“Billie, fingers tightened around the comb.”

“Can I go with you?”

“Course not.”

“Why?”

“’Cause.”

“Don’t wanna.”

“’Cause I’m go’in out with a girl.”

“Why not?”

“Billie’s fingers stopped tracing the window letters on the water faucet and he looked at his brother. The freckles on his nose merged into one.

“Ah, you girl!”

“’Cause I’m go’in out with a girl.”

“’Cause?”

“’Cause I’m go’in out with a girl.”

“Tommy looked at his brother and then slowly, unhurriedly climbed down from the toilet seat. He walked out into the bedroom and then looked back at Billie. The little red and grey painted plane was still lying where it had crashed and he picked it up. With a halfhearted swing of the bat, he turned the room, down the hall, past the table and desk geared into another room.
