Jackson will address grads

Senator Reed Jackson will be guest speaker at the annual commencement ceremony at Highline Community College on Thursday, June 10 at 8:00 p.m.

Senator Jackson, who is the state senator from the 21st district, will deliver the commencement address. He is known for his strong support of education and for his efforts to improve the quality of life for all citizens of Washington State.

The commencement ceremony will be held in the Pavilion at Highline Community College, and is open to the public.

Carnahan eyed for Utah post

President Carnahan has been interviewed for the position of associate commissioner for community and technical colleges in the Utah Department of Higher Education. The position is currently held by Dr. H.H. Bell, United States commissioner of higher education.

If appointed, Carnahan would be responsible for overseeing the operations of the state's community and technical colleges. The position would be a significant step up from his current role as president of Highline Community College.

Audit confirms overpayments

An audit of Highline Community College's payroll records has confirmed overpayments to several employees. The audit was commissioned by the college's finance manager, Donald Slaughter.

The audit, which was performed by the state auditor's office, found that several employees had been paid for hours they did not work. The overpayments ranged from $300 to $3,674.

The college has agreed to repay the overpaid amounts and has implemented new procedures to prevent future overpayments.
Registration does an excellent job upgrading itself

Those who have been through a day of registration at HCC must by now know the meaning of patience. In the past, inexperienced staff, club-footed procedures and faulty computers have tried the tempers of countless students.

These days, with a more stable staff and a reliable computer, registration at HCC has become a much more pleasant experience. These improvements, along with significantly better registration procedures point to quality planning and preparation by Registrar Booker Watt and his staff.

Now that the computer is becoming stable, the fruits of the new registration plan can be fully realized. Students registering for Spring Quarter were due to register for Summer Quarter before allowing new students to register. This provides an opportunity for those needing only a few credits to graduate, a first chance to sign up for needed classes.

As for you students who might be among the last to register, it is time for the college to look with pride at the fruits of the improvements that have made registration for classes a more palatable experience than it has been in the past. Hopefully, these innovations are only the start of a trend which would find other departments on campus striving to gain maximum efficiency in their labor.

When college students anywhere fail to complain loudly at the time they are being the targets of the complaints to silence. For just that reason, Booker Watt and the entire registration staff has done a good job.

Dear Editor:

what we may have lost in the busy process of teaching Camp Fire Girls camp on Vashon Island. As a long time received the idea of a mother-attended. I signed up as a daughter combinations beautiful camp and round dancing in Rounds Hall.

At first only half of the floor was cleared and entire area was cleared and tables were moved against the wall. The Virginia Reel was the first ice breaker. Mothers lined up opposite daughters. At one time, 108 people were stomping and clapping. The Here, the Patty Cake Polka, and the Mexican Hat dance followed.

That was enough so an Aerobic Dance and another Reel were added. Finally I had to fill up the record player and steal away into the night. The point of this item is to alert other instructors of the great thrill one can get from stepping into an entirely different world once in a while. Many years ago I knew this age group, but it all seemed a new experience and it made my heart glad.

If you have an opportunity to do something silly like "go to camp," go! The discovery of old and new really is a thrilling thing - even at my age.

Teacher taught

Dear Editor:

Possibly, this item might coincidentally "college teacher rejuvenated by ten year olds". This is submitted to remind us what we may have lost in the busy process of teaching.

Two weeks ago I had an opportunity to be on a volunteer staff at Camp Smith, a Camp Fire Girls camp on Vashon Island. As a long time member of their board, my duties have always been planning and paper work.

I do not know what possessed me to conceive the idea of a mother-daughter weekend at this beautiful camp - 280 mother-daughter combinations attended. I signed up as a leader of games in the orchard and round dancing in Rounds Hall.

Lesson plans for games were made using all the accepted procedures. Games were scheduled for 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. on Saturday, and 11 a.m. on Sunday.

At the first session eight or nine girls and mothers showed up. Slowly, one by one more filtered into the games until about 20 participated in each session. "Minnie" little girls, the beautiful little girls were something to behold. When the games started, all - - - -danced. They are not only sharp, but quick. The game plans were soon abandoned and we played their games. Foolishly I participated and limped on the orchard after each session.

The dancing was bedlam. At first only half of the floor was cleared of tables, then the entire area was cleared and tables were moved against the wall.

The Virginia Reel was the first ice breaker. Mothers lined up opposite daughters. At one time, 108 people were stomping and clapping. The Here, the Patty Cake Polka, and the Mexican Hat dance followed.

That was enough so an Aerobic Dance and another Reel were added. Finally I had to fill up the record player and steal away into the night. The point of this item is to alert other instructors of the great thrill one can get from stepping into an entirely different world once in a while. Many years ago I knew this age group, but it all seemed a new experience and it made my heart glad.

Trustee comment

Dear Friends:

It has been a real privilege for me to have been part of Highline Community College these past years. As I see it, the primary purpose of any community college is to provide the best education possible to every student. To obtain this objective, there must be rapport, mutual trust, and support among superintendency, administration, and Faculty. This is why I have signed the petition prepared to go.

Again the honor has been come to know each of YOU as a Trustee these past nine years. Sincerely,

D.C. Lundenberg, D.M.D.

RAPE...

If you are between the ages of 18 to 20 and were raped when you were between 15 to 20 years of age, I would very much appreciate your help. If you are willing to volunteer for a study, you will be providing myself and others with important information about what really helped you during the crisis and how the rape affected your feelings about yourself and men. This information will help myself and others provide emotional support to victims like yourself.

Please call 415-496 between 6 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. Leave your phone number and a message for Mary Ann to return your call. After 6:30 p.m. and on weekends call 415-4862. Your participation will be kept confident.

Sincerely,

Construction scheduled for summer

A new piping system utilizing hot water will be installed to replace an older, worn-out system according to Highline Business Manager Donald Slaughter.

The older system, installed between 1963 and 1965, began to show leaks in 1970 and has progressed to the point where replacement will now be more economical than repairs.

The new pipes will be six to eight inches and will carry hot water throughout most of the campus, including heating and domestic water. The pipes will be laid out in underground tunnels which should insulate and protect them from corroding and suffering the same fate as the older ones.

Two main tunnels will carry pipes to affected buildings from the boiler building located just across from the Child Care Center, Slaughter said.

Pipes being replaced from under building floors will be repositioned above surface at either floor underground and will be covered to give a finished appearance.

An example of this can be seen in Faculty Building E where repairs took place last summer.

Buildings 3 and 4 will not get heat from the new system, but will still be converted to electric heat instead.

According to Slaughter the old library and Administration Building will remain separate from the main system to reduce cost.

Exact cost of the new heating system is not yet known as all construction bids have not been reviewed, Slaughter says. Only $15 million has been budgeted for the work, so the cost cannot exceed that.

It is hoped the project will be started by early June so that it will be completed by Fall Quarter.

Summer school will be jotted by the work. Classes will have to be switched from one building to another as old pipes are replaced by new.

Also beginning this summer will be construction on the new $5 million library, the Business Manager said.

The five story structure will be built west of the campus' core area, near the two recently completed buildings.

Not only will it house all facilities presently in the library but also some faculty offices. The lower floor will be used jointly by Central Services (the supply department on campus) and library technical services.

Remodeling of the old library and administration building will be completed at a cost of nearly $1.4 million.

New projects that will begin soon (and may never be able to be completed) are a carport or shed to house vehicles, a grounds building to store gardening equipment and staff, a larger parking lot, remodeling of the dining area and the science, English, and physical education building.

Also an ambitious project has been to secure funds for a $2,500 sundial. Funds will hopefully come partly from surrounding school districts since the building will serve the community as well as the campus.

Volunteer of quarter named

George Very, like everyone else, has a basic philosophy of life. But unlike most others, he is working for his.

He has a strong interest in psychology and emotional problems. Very, CIP volunteer of the quarter, was named by Judy Bousson, CIP coordinator. His supervisor and George relate well with children, is dedicated and understanding. Ms. Bousson says, "He sure must manage his time well to get through all his activities."

Very volunteers at the Highline West Seattle Mental Health Clinic for seven to eight hours a week.

His philosophy is "to get people straightened out when they're criminals in a penal institution."

Very also feels that he is "doing his part for the existing world problems."

At the nursing home, Very's job is socializing with the residents. He encourages them to play games or talk to one another.

He is majoring in psychology and natural science at HCC. His personal goal is to be a registered psychologist. At HCC, he has another year to complete his degree and transfer to a four-year institution.

Very works as a security guard at Valley General Hospital. His job is to protect the hospital's patients but he often talks to the emotionally upset relatives of hospital patients.

About having time for 18 credits at HCC, volunteer work and a paid job Very says, "I manage to squeeze it all in."

Job Placement gives aid

Job Placement has increased in importance ranging from such positions as nurse, cook, waitress, bartender, construction worker, service station attendant, grocery clerk, telephone solicitor and dishwasher.

Job Placement is a service set up by the college to help students find summer jobs or cooperative with students as faculty sponsors. Cooperative members are responsible for granting the supervisory report. They then send the grade to Ms. Bousson so the student may receive credit.

Jobs available this summer include a position at an Olympic Crest Convalescent Home.

CIP at HCC

Degree prog launched

Evening classes for accounting and business administration will be offered at HCC during the 1976-77 academic year. Through this degree extension program applicants having completed 96 credits with the cumulative GPA of 2.5 may earn a B.S. degree in accounting and business administration.

These and other upper division courses will be offered by Central Washington State College next Fall Quarter, 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

Interested students can obtain a brochure containing an application form and class schedule in the Counseling Center lobby.

Pol. Sci. 150

"Grass roots" politics will be the emphasis of a five-credit course to be offered Fall Quarter.

The official title of the course is State and Local Government (Political Science 150) and no previous courses in political science are required.

Explosion!

Flowers and fireworks will set the scene for the Highline Community College Annual Faculty Brunch and Fashion show. "Spring Explosion" will be presented by the Fashion Merchandising Department on June 15 in the campus cafeteria.

Music will be provided by the Franklin Jazz Lab, recent winners of the Reno International Jazz Concert.
Students planning to transfer to the University of Washington in the future may have to submit application requirements.

If you are just completing your work toward a degree at Highline Community College, you’re probably reying to decide whether to go on for a Bachelor’s Degree, or start work— or both.

More often than not, it’s a question of both working and going to school. Ex-grad stump campus

by Jerry Fritzmann and Terry Sel

A May 27 visit to the HCC campus brought congressional candidate Mike Parker back to his old stomping ground.

Parker, a 1976 graduate of HCC, is running for the 6th Congressional district seat currently held by Floyd Hicks. Hicks is retiring to run for the State Supreme Court, and Parker claims a two-to-one advantage over his nearest competitor in the opinion polls.

Democrat Parker is currently finishing his second term as State Representative from the 26th district (South Tacoma). He emphasizes his legislative record in his campaign for Congress.

As vice-chairman of the Legislature's Social and Health Services Committee, Parker developed strong feelings in the area of health and welfare. He favors a more comprehensive national health care system.

"We're the only civilized nation in the world that doesn't have it," he said. He would like to see a national health plan where doctors in the private sector will carry the caseload, but insurance will provide care for all.

Parker feels welfare is a necessary social service. "Without welfare, we'd have hunger riots, you can't blame hungry people for rioting."

Parker contends Washington State has one of the best welfare programs in the country and that state administration has less bureaucracy than federal or local levels.

If elected, Parker hopes to be appointed to the House Health Subcommittee. He wants to eliminate some of the existing federal level bureaucracy.

He is concerned about energy. Fossil fuels such as coal and petroleum are finite and in supply, he said. The use of nuclear energy is inevitable, however, such as tidal power should be developed as an alternative energy supply.

Parker pointed out that nuclear energy is also finite, but foresees its increased use as a short term solution.

"They're going to build nuclear plants, whether in this state, another state, or across the border in another country," the candidate said. More energy is needed as more people enter the job market in the next thirty years.

"If you don't have the energy you don't have jobs."

He does not view safety in nuclear power plants as a problem.

"There hasn't been one death because of a nuclear plant. You risk a greater holocaust not having enough energy."

Parker foresees a possibility of sending more U.S. citizens overseas to teach their counterparts in underdeveloped countries. He says that probably does far more for democracy than all the guns and ammunition we can send them. You can only buy time through strong defense, but you've got to use the time well.

"If we can build strong economies in countries, he should be — on education itself. Special levies should be eliminated so that school administrators can concentrate on educational problems. Parker said. Both educational reform and more money for schools, he feels, are needed.

This state is in an unfortunate situation in regard to teacher strikes, Parker says. Policemen and firemen have mandatory arbitration clauses in their contracts to handle disputes. No such bargaining law exists for teachers.

"Labor relations are really tough in public employment."

He hopes for a clause for teachers to "alleviate some of the tension and open the way for responsible negotiation."

Parker feels welfare is a necessary social service. "Without welfare, we'd have hunger riots, you can't blame hungry people for rioting."

If Parker is appointed to the House Health Subcommittee, he feels he can provide care for all.

"We have to take a hard look at total decentralization of all drugs," he said. He referred to Great Britain's program where addicts can file with the government and get drugs on a prescription basis.

Such a program would eliminate the U.S. black market problem, reduce crime, and force pushers out of business, Parker stated. These are only hopes, Parker says. His suggestion is only that such a program be carefully considered.

Parker is also a business representative for Riker Laboratories. As State Representative, he has sponsored bills increasing the minimum wage in Washington state and guaranteeing overtime wages after 40 hours a week; preventing fraud and abuse of food stamps; a malpractice bill designed to slow rising health care costs; a phase out of the inventory tax; "which has stimulated the economy and provided much needed jobs"; a bill prohibiting discrimination in employment against the handicapped; a child abuse law "which has become a model for the nation"; and the Good Samaritan law which protects those who stop to give someone aid from being sued in court.

Parker likes politics — specifically the variety of situations one faces while in public office. He enjoys such diversity, "you never get in a rut."

And apparently there is no getting around being a "politician" in public office. "Everyone mother in America wants her son to grow up and be president," Parker chuckled, "but they don't want him to become a politician in the meantime."

The 24 police officers will be accepted on a first come, first serve basis for each two-week session. The following prerequisites must be met:

have successfully passed a basic law school, he is currently employed in an investigative responsibility and have three years experience as a police officer.

This is the first time a thorough investigative course from beginning to end has been conducted according to McNulty. Ishi feels there is a need for the program. "This is just an example of the need for continuing interactive training. There are new techniques developed, new ways to interpret evidence. A course such as this brings the officers up to date."

The lecture subjects will range from photographing the crime scene and collecting body fluids to fingerprint evidence. The first week of lectures will include subjects the officers will need to know for the protection and search of the crime scene. The second week will be practical problems week. It will include a mock homicide, drug and rape case. This will give the officers a chance to practice the knowledge learned during the previous week.

The last day of the session will be spent preparing the evidence gathered in the practical problems and delivering it in a mock court. After a verdict is reached, a final examination will be given and the instructors will evaluate the police officers for the two-week session.

As for the future impact of the course on the Crime Lab Ishi said, "Hopefully there'll be a real strong impact, that's why we're going to participate in and instruct classes. We're hoping to raise the level and standards in order to directly benefit from better and more useful evidence."
Summer in the city

For many people, summer is synonymous with mountains and beaches, hiking and sunbathing. We sometimes forget that summer also comes to the city. For those who practice the art of casual strolling, the city provides a variety of places to go and things to see.

Pry your walking shoes from the clutches of last winter’s cobwebs and head downtown for a day of adventures filled with mini-discoveries.

Begin with Pioneer Square, once the bawdiest place north of San Francisco and east of St. Louis. Although tame by today’s standards, the square is as busy as it’s ever been since the turn of the century. Pioneer Square is becoming essentially a people place. It is filled with shops to delight the browser’s heart and many fine restaurants with the emphasis on atmospheric dining.

As you walk the streets of the square, turn your gaze above street level and study the architecture of the city that arose from the ashes of the fire of 1889.

PIONEER SQUARE . . . Old architecture versus the new.

Continue up Pike Street to 4th Avenue and catch the Monorail to Seattle Center. If you’re a camera fan this is the best place to capture a wide variety of people having fun. Children shrieking to the thrill of terrifying rides on the Midway, youngsters playing Russian Roulette with the ever-changing patterns of the International Fountain, and the aged faces of old folks who come daily to visit with each other and pass the time of day.

For those hardy enough to attempt this tour on foot, it’s a stimulating and inexpensive way to spend a sunny summer day.

SEATTLE’S FINEST . . . The Pioneer Squad recreates the atmosphere of the 1890s.

Policemen in 1890s garb and mounted patrols frequent the area and are always willing to stop and talk or even pose for a picture. Sit awhile on a park bench and watch the world go by. Children playing on sculptured art, pretty girls flinging a Frisbee back and forth. Watch lost souls who once had dreams and a future as they prospect for change from those who are willing to part with it.

Seattle’s historic waterfront is only a few short blocks away for those who desire a change of scenery. Here you can walk north past the spot where the famous ton o’ gold arrived to fire the imagination of thousands who went north to Alaska in search of wealth.

The seafood restaurants, curiosity shops and import stores are reason enough to linger on for the better part of a day.

At Pier 59, cross Alaskan Way and begin the long trek up the back stairs of the public market. The market assaults your senses with the aroma of herbs and spices, the sounds of fish hawkers and one-man bands, and the stall of colorful fruit and produce displayed with artistic care. If the spirit is willing, continue up Pike Street to 4th Avenue and catch the Monorail to Seattle Center.

Wild ride . . . Youngsters delight in the terrifying ride at Seattle Center.
Swing through Seattle on a budget

by Jerry Fritzmann

For a multitude of reasons, the average college student is invariably bereft of one of nature's most precious commodities - money. Thus, the old cliche "discover your own area first" becomes the sole option to the potential globe-trotting student. We are lucky, then, to live in an area with numerous attractions perfect for thin wallets.

There are a number of major attractions in Seattle that can be experienced on a tight budget. You can't see them all in one day, but if you try, be sure to start at 4 a.m. and don't plan on finishing until midnight.

For those who view Seattle as a foreign country (such as many South King County residents), a good way to see Seattle is to make a weekend of it. Start early Friday afternoon, stay two nights at a major downtown hotel, and head for home Sunday evening. It's a two day vacation that you can fool yourself into believing was a two-week cross-country excursion.

1. SEATTLE CENTER: Admission is free, and even on the nicest days the grounds aren't overly crowded. The Center House is truly an international delight, with shops and restaurants representing over 20 countries. If you can spare an extra $1.50, go to the top of the Space Needle. The unique 360 degree view from the observation deck is well worth the price, and you can plan your next move while viewing the possibilities.

2. PIKE PLACE MARKET: Newly renovated, the market still has almost all of its funky charm. The shops offer everything from psychedelic postcards to Russian caviar, and there are more panhandling musicians per square foot than anywhere else on the coast.

3. WOODLAND PARK: Seattle is one of few large American cities with a free zoo. After you've seen the animals and eaten none of the finest cotton candy to be had anywhere, go down the hill to Lower Woodland and play golf, tennis, frisbee, or just stroll (or bicycle) around Green Lake.

4. PIONEER SQUARE: Over the past few years, old Seattle has been dragged from the streets of the wino and mugger, and is now the center of the city's jumping nightlife. Most everything in Pioneer Square is expensive, including the cover charge at Seattle's premier jazz club, the Pioneer Square.

5. GAS WORKS PARK: Like all other city parks, Gas Works Park is free of charge. The view of Lake Union from the power plant that is at the turn of the century was considered as dangerous as nuclear plants are today.

6. LAKE WASHINGTON: The southeast shore of the lake is prime bike riding area. The lakeside boulevard is fairly flat from Leschi Park to Seward Park. A large stretch of Lake Washington Boulevard is blocked off and turned over to bicycles one Sunday every month during the summer.

7. FERRY RIDE: On a nice day the Washington State Ferry to Bremerton is an extremely pleasant excursion. The cost is only $1.20 for a 90 minute round trip across Puget Sound.

8. WATERFRONT: While you wait for the ferry to Bremerton, take a walk down Seattle's fast-developing central waterfront. The new aquarium won't be finished for another year, but there are still plenty of sights to take in, and the salt-water breeze is refreshing.

9. PUBLIC BEACHES: Seattle has a plethora of beaches on the shores of Lake Washington and Puget Sound. Golden Gardens, Matthews Beach, and Seward Park have their share of bathers, but the Queen City's most popular strip of sand appears to be Alki Beach in West Seattle. On a nice weekend day, a drive down three miles of Alki Avenue takes the better part of an hour, but it also has pretensions toward being a summer celebrity hangout. Slick Watts has already been spotted cruising by this spring.

The Puget Sound Railway Historical Association has had but one single purpose since its conception in 1956: the preservation of steam and electric railroading.

The association was begun by a handful of determined individuals who started acquiring outdated equipment mostly through donations from railroads such as the Great Northern. After a site was chosen for a railroad museum, the association began the task of building up its membership and restoring the equipment to its original condition.

The museum was located near Snoqualmie Falls. In 1962, the association fired up its first steam locomotive and the Puget Sound and Snoqualmie Valley Railroad was born. Until last year, the little railroad operated on less than a mile of its own track. Early this year the main line expanded and began running excursion trips from the old Northern Pacific depot in the town of Snoqualmie. The line is now approximately seven miles long and the high point of the trip is the spectacular view from the west side of Snoqualmie Falls.

Club membership now numbers approximately 200 who strive continually to recreate steam railroading as it used to be. Ticket purchases, uniformed conductors and engineers in overalls lend a touch of authenticity to the operation.

Tom Lawrence, the association's magazine editor, says "steam railroading has a nostalgic appeal to those who are old enough to remember its heyday." For those too young to remember, the sight of an engine under steam with its powerful drivers in motion, the hissing of steam and the clanging of its bell are all it takes to make them wish they were old enough to remember it themselves.

Steam locomotives still work their magic on little boys and grown men alike, much as they did for over a century before steam gave way to diesel power.

The age of steam railroading isn't quite dead yet.

SIR offers
grudge drags,
Fuelers

by Bob Miller

Seattle International Raceway (SIR) offers a schedule to please both the drag racer and the drag racing fan. Low bucks grudge racers who drive a '64 Chevelle and '90 GTO’s to work the remainder of the week professionals lining up in Top Fuel Eliminators and all the racers between these extremes can find a niche at SIR. The 138,000 attendance figure last year speaks for the enjoyment of the fans.

SIR is located 18 miles south of Seattle in rural Kent. Featured are a National Hot Rod Association drag strip, a Continental course. SIR officials do not expect to see a huge influx of fans, but those just out to discover how fast their car will go are both afforded the opportunity of discovery at the weekly Wednesdays SIR grudge drag. All cars must have mufflers to run and can square off against anyone they choose. Grudge racing is the closest most people will ever come to the bumper-to-bumper mania in "Indiana on the Freeway." The Elmenrion run is hard to beat. Further information may be obtained by calling SIR at 631-4750. Gates open at 5 p.m. with racing until 10 p.m.

For the racer of a more serious nature, E.T. Bracket races are scheduled for Friday nights through August 25 in conjunction with the weekly motocross.

The professional schedule features many headline events, topped off by the Fall Nationals to be held Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, September 17-19.

The eclectic mix of restaurants, available on several kinds of bread, and alfalfa sprouts on your sandwich, is known for their cinnamon rolls. Celery, carrots, radishes to munch while you wait. Poppy seed cake is great.

Old Spaghetti Factory* Surrounded by gold and seated on antiques, you’ll enjoy their specialty, spaghetti. Conspicuously delicious. Very popular, go about 8 on a weekend evening or before opening time at 5, otherwise a 30 to 90 minute wait may be experienced. Elliot and Broad, Seattle, 1735 Jefferson, Tacoma.

Brasserie French restaurant with extraordinary food. Informally decorated - 302 1st Avenue (Pioneer Square), Seattle, 432-5911.

Odd Fish 'n Chips* Consistently good fish 'n chips. Other seafood available. The restaurant is very popular on hot summer days. 2666 Alki South West, 936-9906.

Jethro Tull, ZZ Top, and McCartney will go on sale sometime in July. All three shows will be in the Paramount.

— The Long Island Bad Boys, Blue Oyster Cult along with Bob Seeger and the Englewood, Franks and Mahogany Rush, jam in the Coliseum.

— The return of the awe-inspiring Jeff Beck. He plays two shows the same night at the Paramount.

— Rocky Mountain high - country boy John Denver returns for an engagement at the Coliseum.

— AWA provides an atmosphere for jiving and bumping in the Arena.

— An all-star cast will be on hand for the annual CTI Summer Jazz Festival. Yes! (Mas- ter Magic) Grover Washington will be here with his band. Tickets probably will go on sale sometime in July. All three shows will be in the Paramount.

Ticketing for the Paramount shows can be purchased at the usual Paramount outlets. All other concert tickets can be bought at Fidelity Lane. Summer may be busy but not offices — Chicago, America Yes, Jethro Tull, ZZ Top, and Seattle Summer Jam. All concerts are subject to change and forer predictions. So enjoy the concerts, and most of all have a rocks' summer.

The play-taking place at the Paramount this season is called "The Outward Bound."...
No rainy days in summer

by Stella McNutt

Summers were warm, sunny and beautiful when I was young — for some reason there were no rainy summer days.

In the depression years we were as poor as everyone else we knew. Only we kids weren’t poor — we had plenty of food, clothes to wear and a well kept home full of love and the warm summer smells of home baked bread and scratch cooking. No tasteless frozen dinners for us.

No one in our neighborhood took a vacation. Or our summer days we tramped through the hills behind our home picking the hard to find but oh-so-good-to-eat tiny wild blackberries. In late summer we scrambled up the trees of our farm near Satsop with evergreen blackberries for picking and sold the big greens to the nearest grocery. We day-dreamed a lot about summer jobs. We didn’t understand the huge world map tacked to a kitchen wall showing the various parts of the world. We couldn’t believe every child old enough to pick berries and worked the hardest.

Every child in our school was fingerprinted and given an ID number on a metal tag. We didn’t understand the reasons.

There was no TV on Sunday morning. We knew we would meet most of our friends there. We didn’t own sailboats or speedboats. We swam, sat around in the sun and talked and talked and talked... and talked... and talked... and talked... and talked... and talked... and talked... and talked... and talked... and talked...

And that’s the way it is... 200 years from today

Before World War II, the Annual May Day Procession at Saint Alphonsus Catholic Church was a soul-stirring event for the community. Girls and boys, dressed in white, marched with nuns and ornately robed priests around the block singing hymns, carrying flowers to the altar of the Church where the statue of the Blessed Virgin Mary was crowned with a wreath of spring blossoms. It was our favorite procession of the year.

My brothers, sisters, and I knew it signalled the beginning of summertime fun. "Summertime was 'specialtime' in those years. It meant long lazy days, no more blue serge school uniforms and most of all, getting away from the mud for three long months. To understand this feeling, one had to live in Seattle in 1940 and go to a Catholic school. Our family lived in the Ballard district, then known as the "shingle capital of the world." It was a predominantly Scandinavian community and most of the men worked either in the sawmills or were fishermen.

The residents were warm, hard working people, living in neat one and two-story homes and tree-lined streets. Everyone seemed to know their homes and raise respectable children.

Ours was a happy Catholic family. We lived in the shadow of Saint Alphonsus Church, both literally and figuratively. The big church, red brick school, convent for the nuns and rectory for the priests were the center of the world for its parishioners. Growing up Catholic in the Thirties and Forties was both unbelievable and wonderful. Unbelievable because it was a "black" or "white" world of moral truths. All one's actions were either good or bad, and if bad, a venial or mortal sin. There was no doubt and little individual choice. The Baltimore Catechism defined "Why God made me" and "What is an impure thought.

It was wonderful because of the security and comfort of living in a church with a loving but stern God. We knew if we died in the State of Grace, Heaven was guaranteed. A person was a member of the Church and a part of our constant companion and our constant guardian was Jesus in all sorts of dangers and temptations. The mass, sacraments, truths and traditions of the Church were enclosed in our days and sometimes tormented our nights.

However, the long arm of the Church lost some of its power in the summer and it was delicious to slip into the life the nuns called easy and sinful, and where we excluded adults as much as possible.

"Kick the Can" under the street lights.

In the summer, Mary and I always looked forward to trying to outdo the street corner vendors on the street corner. We would spend the day at our father's office. Going to town or the streetcar was always a big deal. The fare was about 10 cents or under if we used one of the old brown tokens. I remember the delight of boarding the streetcar that ran on rails down the center of the street, sitting on the brightly varnished slatted wood seats and hearing the clang of the bell as it stopped for passengers.

Our father was branch manager of the Western Union Telegraph near the waterfront. During the day we watched with fascination as he read words on the ticker tape machine. Then he sent messages on to ships and delivered messages tucked inside the traditional yellow Western Union envelopes.

As we sprawled on the soft ground, we tried to think of someone who had a car and could take us to Playland Amusement Park so we could ride the "Giant Dipper." We swapped outlandish stories of what we did with our neighbors on the Fourth of July. We talked about radio programs such as "Captain Midnight," "The All American Boy" and "Back Rogers" were our heroes. Sometimes we listened to the Band Concerts at the Harding Memorial on the other side of the park. It was an undisciplined time. It was a good time.

The war was coming. We were impressed with a ride on the Madison Street Cable Car that ran up First Hill. We sat on the shiny wooden side-seats as the steep grade forced us to side into each other.

Visits to the Seattle waterfront were a big part of our summer. Ferry rides were a treat as we took a special joy to ride on the Kalakala ("Kal-ack-ala"). We were thrilled with the sight of that great shingle-shaped silver boat with her shiny aluminum paint job gliding through the waters of Puget Sound. On summer evenings she made a cruise around Elliott Bay with a dance band aboard and the music was broadcast on the radio. The fare for the evening was $1. Round trip fare from Seattle to Bremerton was only 90 cents.

We sometimes rode the streetcars but usually we walked. Ours was mostly a child's world and it was safe to walk the five miles to Woodland Park during the summer with our lunches tucked under our belts.

We saw the animals, rusted under the shade of the great trees, shared secrets, and told lies.
No rainy days in summer

by Stella McNutt

Summer were warm, sunny and beautiful when I was young — for some reason there were no rainy summer days.

In the depression years we were as poor as everyone else we knew. Only we kids weren't poor... we had plenty of food, clothes to wear and weren't poor a well kept home full of love we knew. Only we kids dinners for us.

We knew the farm near Satsop with ripe apricots was irresistible. So could climb the highest. We searched for the biggest, everygreen blackberries for ever sold the big summer money makers. We picked and sold the big two to four cents a pound and Peeling a cascara bark for which we were paid about five cents a pound. Peeling a cascara tree required sharp eyes, (to find the tree) a sharp knife (to skillfully cut panels partway around the tree), and strong fingers to work their way under the bark and pry it loose from the tree. Believe me these were not "get rich quick schemes." Every year Dad took us to new areas to pick berries and every year he played the same old trick. My brother and I worked to fill our gallon pails while Dad wandered off by himself. We picked juicy sunwarmed berries, arguing about who had picked the most and worked the hardest. Suddenly from the distance we heard crashing ungroans coming closer and closer. We knew a huge bear was about to descend on us and eat us alive. We were ready to drop our berry pails and run, but Dad, the bear, emerged lauging from behind a clump of trees.

For hours on end, we'd lie on the front lawn and find shapes in the clouds. Abraham Lincoln silhouettes and elephants were easy to find. We daydreamed a lot... dreams that were much more entertaining and certainly more imaginative than most TV programs today.

The evening ritual at the empty lot down the street included every child old enough to swing a baseball bat. It was the after-dinner baseball game. We chose sides, spent talking about anything and everything. Walking and talking was closeness and sharing. World War II changed our lives. We lived close to the ocean and our town became a major shipping port. What seemed like at least a million service men. We were not allowed on our beloved beaches. The Coast Guard had strung barbed wire to repel possible invaders.

As the war progressed... we pinned flags on little dots in the ocean. The game changed as the war progressed... the boys argued over who would play what position and most of the rest of the time fighting over whether the last pitch was a strike or a ball.

The game changed as the sun went down and it was too dark to see the ball. Now the brave souls who weren't afraid of the dark... and those whose mothers hadn't called them in... played "Kick the Can." A giddy feeling of fear while hiding in the dark behind a huge lilac bush made goose bumps rise and primal sweat even in the warm summer air. What a relief when the one who was "it" ran off in the opposite direction from our hiding place and we ran "home" to kick the big dirty tomato can!

We walked everywhere. Walking the road to school, picking up little swirls of dust, we

Loose Lips Sink Ships

Every child in our school was fingerprinted and given an ID number on a metal tag. We didn't understand the significance.

Six uncles were serving in various parts of the world. The huge world map tucked to a wall showed the battleships in Europe marked with colored pins and tiny paper American flags. As the war in the Pacific progressed we pinned flags on little dots in the ocean on names we had never heard before. It was a vivid lesson in geography.

Homeowners proudly worked their Victory gardens, unlike the P-patches of today. We compared produce and discussed the merits of various seeds. It was a time of great national pride and togetherness. (Sometimes I wonder if my children's generation will ever have that feeling. I hope they will, though not at the expense of a war.)

At sundown during the war we closed the blackout curtains and made sure all outdoor lights were turned off. Air raid drills were regular. The eerie sound of sirens shattered the quiet night and we ran to turn our lights and check that no stray beam would alert the imaginary planes overhead.

One night during an alert we discovered that the block air raid warden had gone off with his family and left the garage light on. The entire neighborhood gathered in front of his house. The indignant fury of the crowd was like a Lynch party in an old John Wayne movie. Alerts were serious business to us.

Then the war ended and life returned to normal. We bought shoes, sugar, gasoline and other scarce items without ration stamps and tokens. It was a time of joy and thanksgiving. We had won. Happiness prevailed in homes where the men returned safely. Grief and loneliness touched others.

Our summers in high school years were probably not much different than those of today's young men and women. We were less open about smoking, sex and other forms of "sin" but they existed. Drugs were certainly not as prevalent as they are today. In fact, we had heard of "dopey friends" in the big cities but we didn't even know anyone who knew anyone who used the stuff. All in all, we seemed to have fewer social pressures than the young today.

Boys chased girls and girls chased the boys. At our favorite drive-ins everyone met after the movie on Saturday night. On warm days we gravitated to a nearby lake. We knew we would meet most of our friends there. We didn't own sailboats or speedboats... we swam, sat around in the sun and talked... and talked... and talked and the joke box on the open dance pavilion blared out Nat King Cole's "For You," and Doris Day's "It's Magic" along with "Hire Boat to China" and "Mannie Doats.

We built our dreams on those warm sunny summer afternoons.

The water is nice at Rainier story and photos by Becky Morris

Backpacking on Mt. Rainier can bring experiences hard to match elsewhere — drinking water straight from a creek, for example, or eating a meal without ever having to lift a finger. Staying at the trail shelter, it was hard to imagine that a snowstorm out of camp, and trying to get back in, as the wind into the camp has been closed.

One day my parents and I, on the high country with nothing to do, decided to take off from camp and explore. We left the trail and started to climb a ridge that overlooked the Carbon Glacier, paralleling it in its course down the mountain.

We went higher and higher, closer and closer to the mountain. When we got to the point where we couldn’t go much higher without actually climbing the mountain (about 8,200 feet) we settled down to eat our lunch and watch for avalanches on the mountain.

A large avalanche slid off Mt. Rainier and came to a stop for the first time right at the top of the ridge we were on. The avalanche was blowing across the ice.

We looked down on the ridge and saw a group of backcountry campers who had set up camp on the ridge. They ran along the ridge, and felt the cool wind blowing across the ice.

There are many other spots a group can visit on Rainier. Ambitious groups can take the Wonderland Trail and hike around the mountain, or they can take a shorter hike to interesting places as Panorama Point, Paradise Park, Mystic Lake, Gobbler’s Knob, Emerald Ridge and Indian Henry’s Hunting Ground.

Mt. Rainier is one of the Northwest’s most popular backpacking spots. But backpacking has become so popular that it has been turned into a dust bowl. Over 600 people are allowed to camp on numbers out at one time, and the short three-month season, 1,387 backcountry permits were issued last year, and a total of 28,100 visitor nights spent on the trails.

This means that about 327 groups are on the trails every week, with the highest concentration being on weekends. The permits are essentially a reservation guaranteeing access to the few places where backcountry camping is permitted. Permits can be obtained in person out no more than 60 days in advance, so it’s a good idea to get them early. The good spots go fast. Reservations can be made by calling the park at 569-2211.

The time of summer for a trip depends on the destination. The lowland trails are free of snow quite early, but the high trails probably won’t be clear and ready to use until mid-July. The lowland trails are never completely free of snow. Information on trail conditions can also be obtained by calling the park.

There are other places besides “The Mountain” to hike. One can go to the North Cascades, the Olympics, or even the American and Canadian Rockies. But Mt. Rainier, in my prejudiced opinion, is one of the best.

Joggers

by Bob Miller

I have been a runner and jogger for three or four years. I run on teams and often compete, sometimes well, sometimes on the borderline between mediocre and poor. Through the years I have always enjoyed jogging and the health it brings.

Jogging is “fun-running” according to Runners World magazine. That is, jogging is running for fun, fitness, or whatever other reason one may find the activity to be enjoyable or beneficial.

The beginnings of jogging are difficult to pinpoint. Some may say the activity began when ancient man took a few quick steps to run down a small animal. But when ancient man ran, he ran for survival and not enjoyment.

The modern jogging age probably began with the teachings and preaching of Dr. Kenneth Cooper and Bill Bowerman, former head track coach at the University of Oregon. Cooper’s aerobics program, “Pay by the Foot,” has been very popular.

For someone contemplating taking up any kind of new exercise, a doctor’s approval is always in order. Jogging is a very popular form of physical activity, and there are many places where you can jog.

The best place to watch on Mt. Rainier if one wants to see avalanches is Skyline Divide, where the tracks. Bowserman, former head track coach at the University of Oregon, began the famous “Pay by the Foot” town of Eugene, Oregon.

Many people wrongly associate running with pain or punishment, probably from memories of “taking a lap” when guilty of some misdeed in high school PE classes. Running slowly, or jogging, doesn’t hurt and, after a short period of conditioning and growing used to the new activity, can actually be quite enjoyable and calming.

Vacation! leave it all behind

by Terry Sell

Summertime is vacation time. Vacation is a time to get away and leave it all behind. Whatever the 'all' may be. Any weekend, right here in Washington state, one can get away to some of the best camping in the world. Approximately one third of this state's total area is reserved for public recreation use. That includes three national parks, two wilderness areas, three national recreation areas, one national historical park, two national historical sites, nine national forests and 178 state parks.

The state park's figure is somewhat misleading. The system includes 43 undeveloped sites and nine "marine parks," accessible by boat only. That leaves 196 sites that anyone can reach by car or bike, 81 of which have camping facilities.

All the national parks, forests, recreation and wilderness areas have camp sites. This leaves quite a variety to choose from. Most of the areas are quite beautiful, and the majority are near water, be it the ocean, Puget Sound, a lake or a river.

My family has gone camping since I was two years old, so I have acquired a few favorite spots. Keep in mind this is only a partial list. If I've left out a place that deserves mention, it's probably because I haven't been there and not because I didn't like it. The following are not listed according to preference:

SOLEDUCK FALLS... favorite sight on a nature trail at the Hoh River Valley in Olympic National Park.

SUMMERTIME SNOWS... looming ominous behind a lake, Mt. Baker is snow covered all year round, providing a haven for cross country skiers and sledders alike.

The lake and also in the nearby Methow River. Other attractions include horse rental, trail and water skiing, hot showers and fine hiking. Many of the campsites are right down by the lake, and the scenery is incomparable. (You may see that phrase again in this article.)

... Mt. Rainier National Park: if there is anything more majestic I have not seen yet.

There are so many trails to bike on and so many things to see one could spend a summer on Rainer. There are terrific campsites at Longmire and Ohanapechs. Longmire is right on the Nisqually river on the way to the mudslide area. The view of the big mountain from the slide is maybe one of the best. Also of interest are the Ice Caves (if they open this year) and the Rammert Ridge trail, both of which start from Paradise lodge.

... Olympic National Park: the jolly green garden

The rain forest is really majestic. The number of runners like Seattle's Norm Bright is growing yearly. Bright is 67 years old and has run the 7.5 mile Tacoma race. The oldest to finish was well over 75 years old and the youngest was only 4 years old. And the 4-year-old girl finished 34 minutes after the deadline.

Escape in a smooth sail

by Paula Rudberg

Escape from your dull daily routine and board a sailboat for a day. Afterwards, your week will be smooth sailing.

Sailing offers a full day's activity, a day of instruction depending on one's rank on board a captain or crew. Yet the small craft do not entail a large amount of duties by either captain or crew. The captain is responsible for pushing the ship, serving refreshments and tending needs at the dock. Both ship positions receive pleasure from the cruise regardless of the small duties.

The captain often has a day of instruction and navigation unless followed by fellow mariners. Both crew positions receive pleasure from the cruise regardless of the small duties.

In the Pacific Northwest there are many bodies of fresh and saltwater available to smooth sail.

SCUBA grows in popularity

by Lars Rynning

It is not uncommon to see scuba divers on nearby salt or fresh water everywhere. Lakes and saltwater are available to SCUBA divers to enjoy a growing in popularity during the past few years.

A simple card on a portable bulletin board can get you a tank and certification. There are many dive shops in Seattle and Tacoma which will be certified during 1976. The tank is filled with high pressured air in which the diver uses a regulator, the diver uses a regulator, a swim mask, fins, weight belt, buoyancy vest, and wetsuit. Canoeing — a hullava way to go

by Tom Salzer

Picture me, if you will, a warm summer evening. A light breeze stirs a few wisps of cloud through the black and white of nearby rock and rapids. Explosively you finish your run as you shoot swiftly into deeper, quieter waters. Wiping your face with your hand, you breath a little slower now, but wanting to do it again as soon as possible.

The pulsating power of the river is charging your body with adrenalin. You are relaxed, almost asleep, yet vitally alert and alive with instincts deep within you welling the surface of your consciousness. It's simply beautiful.

Or try this scene. You're sliding in a canoe down a river, leaving your cares behind you. The water banks slip by in a continually changing constant pattern. The current is getting swifter and the water do most of the work. The river banks slip by in a continually changing constant pattern. The current is getting swifter and the water do most of the work.
Islands hold adventure for boaters
by Lars Rynning

With the coming of summ-er, many people look to the water as a form of relaxation, exercise, or even vacation adventure.

There are people who are boaters, and there are probably those who have recently bought a boat or those who are contemplating chartering a boat for a week, and still others who dream of open water with no serious intentions. I am citing some of my favorite places to go by boat, but first join me on an imaginary day on the water.

We are lulled out of a sound sleep, rocking gently at anchor, by the morning sun. It promises to be a nice day. The early morning ripples can be heard against the sides of the boat. Stumbling over last night’s empire, we make our way to the galley where morning nourishment is procured (nothing earthy smell can be compared to that of breakfast being made while afloat).

After breakfast, we sit with the crew and discuss the day’s plans while looking over the charts. Perhaps we’ll find the San Juan Islands, or with good weather, we can make Canada by afternoon.

Does this seem like adventure to you? To thousands of “old salts” and many first-timers this will be new to beginners.

Those with boats will probably recognize the places I’ll mention, but many others will be new to beginners.

I will use Skyline Marina, at the north west end of Fidalgo Island as an example. Skyline is two and a half to three miles west of Anacortes by car, and approximately seven and a half miles by boat. Skyline is equipped with all types of fuels at the gas dock, repair services, boat launching, fishing supplies, groceries and laundering. It has many facilities, boat rentals, an airfield, restaurant, and U.S. customs service.

Moving West from Skyline about 18 miles, between Orcas Island and Shaw Island, we come to Jones Island, a Washington state park. Jones Island lays Roche Harbor. This is a quiet town with hotel rooms and cabins, stores and laundrymat available. There is a full service gas dock, a customs office, and repair services, and boat launching, rentals and restaurant.

Just five miles south of Jones Island is Friday Harbor. This little community is a joy to walk through with it’s colorful little shops and buildings. Just about everything can be found here; a barber shop, market, liquor store, hotel, medical center, air taxi and customs office. Both Friday Harbor and Roche Harbor are on San Juan Island, and the ferry landing is at Friday Harbor.

There’s snow year ’round
by Paula Rudberg and Terry Sell

Summertime is definitely the best time of the year, just about anything. Even for snow skiing.

Washington state is blessed with three areas where the white stuff stays almost all year round. Both Baker and Mt. Rainier are snow capped year round, and Crystal Mountain’s Green Valley usually maintains a snow pack through July.

Mt. Baker and Crystal Mountain operate ski lifts as long as the snow lasts, so one can ski in style throughout the summer. Day chair rates are $6 at Crystal and a similar price at Mt. Baker.

Skiing on Mt. Rainier involves a little hiking as well. One can climb to Camp Muir (about 10,000 feet), switch from climbing boots to skiis, and schuss back down the mountain. Storms are frequent and come without warning, so overnight equipment is advisable for any one on Rainier.

Shirs brand the snow that doesn’t go north for the summer—corn snow—and it is not regarded as the best stuff to ski in. But for anyone who wants to ski that badly, it shouldn’t be difficult.

If one starts at Skyline and moves south along Fidalgo Island one will come to Reservation Bay and Deception Pass. There is good fishing along this stretch, called Burrows Bay. Reservation Bay has a few floats and a small dock. Though there is easy car access, it is still a quiet bay that provides a good diving beach. There are also groceries there are some interesting towns nearby. Seven miles south of Jones Island lays Roche Harbor. This is a quiet town with hotel rooms and cabins, stores and laundrymat available. There is a full service gas dock, a customs office, and repair services, and boat launching, rentals and restaurant.

Here come the thunderboats
by Larry Steagall

It’s almost the time of year, hydro fans, to get out binoculars and swagbags from your caches.

Bill Muncey, chauffeur of the old Pay ’N Pak, and now the new Atlas Van Lines, looks like the man to beat this year, especially with a controversial win in Miami under his belt. His biggest competition will most likely come from veteran driver and Seattle favorite Billy Schumacher. Schumacher finished second behind Muncey in Miami. He will be piloting last year’s Wiesfield’s which is sponsored by Olympia Beer. The boat was a challenger last year and it looks like it will be again this year.

Other trophy contenders will come from Bernie Little’s Beer Boat, the Budweiser, the Miss U.S., and the Miss Madison. The annual Seafair trophy race is scheduled for August 8 on beautiful Lake Washington.

So far there are no smaller classes of limited hydros planned to race on Green Lake this summer. The closest they will come is Alder Lake in Tacoma on July 3 and 4.

For years Seattle was referred to as the “bush city by the bay.” The reason: the lack of major league sports teams, particularly baseball and football.

But no more. Following the settlement of the law suit against the American Baseball League (AL) and the “generosity” of the National Football League (NFL), the Seattle Sounders and the Seattle Seahawks will join the two most followed sports teams in Western Washington.

Along with the Seahawks and the Sonics, Seattle is also represented by the Sounders, one of the top attendance success stories in all basketball; the Sounders have led the way in professional soccer in America, and the Rainiers, the last of Seattle’s minor league baseball teams.

Down south, the Tacoma Twins battle in the Pacific Coast Baseball League, and the Tides fight it out in the American Soccer League.

THE SOUNDERS

The Sounders are going through many changes this year. After two successful seasons, their division format this year has been changed. Along with that, the team has some new home games in the Kingdome. And, finally, the team has undergone an entire revamp.

Nearly all of the new players are synonymous with European soccer. John McClainthe, the goat of a defender from Everton, is one of the quickest and most skilled players on the team. Wallace, captain of the Dundee United in Scotland, was his team’s most valuable player in 1974. Mike England, a former teammate of John, is a former World Cup semi-finalist. Wallace is a returnee from last year’s squad, is a former World Cup semi-finalist. Wallace played in the World Cup in England.

Not only is soccer the only attraction, but there is usually a promotion of some sort before every game. There is always a youth league soccer match preceding home games,” said Tim Haig, Sounders public relations man. “And, we usually have a good halftime show.

Ticket prices range from $2.25 to $6. Students pay half-price in all sections but the $6 Junior League soccer clubs have special rates in the $2.50 section, and groups of 20 or more can enter for $1 less per seat available in all sections, except the $6 seats.

In the South-area, tickets can be purchased at Lamont’s, all Fidelity Lane outlets, Renton Sports Supply (located at the Renton Shopping Center), Bon Marche of Tacoma, and Toma Sports of Stadium Federal Way.

For ticket information, call 429-9454 or write Seattle Sounders Soccer Club, 260 Metropolitan Building, Seattle, WA.

THE RAINFOREST

The Rainiers are concluding a part of Seattle history, the last team to be designated “Rainiers.”

They are an independent entry in the Northern (AA) Baseball League. Art Peterson, owner and general manager, said the line-up is stocked with “former major league draftees and those who survived our invitation-only try outs. We are interested in players with CC and/or college experience, and who have no work, far enoughOL, our college that would tie them down. We want young players who have a chance to develop.”

The Rainiers’ regular season begins June 15. They will have no game July 4, but will feature many Special Nights when fans receive reduced rates. “Just off the top of my head, I can think of four or five Special Nights,” commented Peterson, “and every home game on Thursdays is designated Family Night.

And if a group of 25 or more people call ahead and let us know they are coming as a group, their tickets are cut 50 cents apiece.

Ticket prices are fair, especially to the sports fan on a tight budget. For those 15 and under, the price is a mean buck. Students or seniors can fork out $1.50 with their I.D.s.

The most distinctive fact is the low food concession prices. “We don’t want to charge $75 cents cheaper than the Kingdome for all the same items,” said Peterson. “Our hot dogs, which are the same as theirs, are 15 cents cheaper, and our beer is 25 cents cheaper. We also have a large, better mail for 50 cents, while their quality of our food is high. Many of our fans have complimented us on the quality of our food.

For those who like souvenirs, we also carry a small assortment of items. We have ticketed Rainiers t-shirts, and team pennants.

Ticket prices for the complete season are $28.50, while the season ticket holders can be purchased for any six games during the season. We have also carried a small assortment of items, such as stuffed bears, pennants, post-cards, buttons, skis caps, and pennants in the dome.

SEATTLE SUPERSONICS

The Supersonics are heating up into their fifth season. They are an independent entry in the National Basketball Association, and are annually attracting one of the largest per capita crowds in the league.

The Supersonics have no special promotions this year. Their tickets are $7.50 per seat in all sections. Ticket prices for the complete season are $18.00.

If you want to see the Sonics, you must make reservations. The Sonics are among the finest rosters of any previous expansion teams. They also have among the finest home-game public relations staffs in all football, basketball, baseball and hockey.

SEATTLE SEAHAWKS

The SeaHawks are limited by the NFL, will have no special “give-away” nights this year. Also, the only special missile college for season ticket holders is first choice for seats next year, and may come early and watch an east coast game prior to the regular home game.

Even though we aren’t having any give aways,” said Peterson, “We may have commemorative gifts for our first game in the dome, against the San Francisco 49ers August 1.

SEATTLE SEAHAWKS

The rest of the pre-season schedule has Chicago at Seattle Aug. 1, Los Angeles here Aug. 14, at Denver Aug. 21, San Diego here Aug. 29, and Oakland here Sept. 4. All home pre-season games will be taped and shown either the next day, or in the late evening.

Before summer vacation ends, two regular season games will be played. St. Louis opens here Sept. 12, followed by a road game in Washington Sept. 19.

Good luck to all of you!

JERRY BROWN NEEDS YOU!

Jerry Brown campaign staff has formed the “Citizens for Brown” campaign committee.

The committee, along with the dome’s other tenants, has a limited seating. All ticket holders are $14, $15, $17, and $5. There is a limited special student or group rate.

Tickets prices for the remaining 6,000 seats (there are 14,947) in ticket holders, are $14, $15, $17, and $5. There is a limited special student or group rate.

The team can be reached by car at the dome’s other tenants, by phone at 261-1599, or by mail at P.O. Box 6276, Seattle 98109. The phone number is 742-1800.

Don Anderson, SeaHawks public relations director, said “Our movements are standard to the other league teams. Yearbooks, pennants, bubble-head dolls, posters, patches, bumper stickers, hats, bank, seat cushions, and decals will be sold at the stadium.”

The Seattle Sounders have been in the National Soccer League for many years. The Sounders have been in the National Soccer League for many years. The Sounders have been in the National Soccer League for many years.
New club is active

The Society of Innkeepers and Restaurateurs, HCC's newest club, is already reaping the benefits of their participation in the Pacific Northwest Restaurant Convention and Exposition held in April at the Seattle Center. The club was given a booth at the Exposition to aid in making hotel and restaurant employers aware of the Hotel/Restaurant Management Program at HCC. Communications from several firms have been received by Mike Armstrong, program director, expressing interest and seeking information about the students and the various facets of the program.

The focal point of the booth was a photo layout of HCC students on their jobs at various hotels in the hospitality industry. Brochures were handed out by Mike Armstrong, program director, expressing interest and seeking information about the students and the various facets of the program.

Future brings foul weather

Quick! Run to your nearest grocery store, right now, and start hoarding all the food you can get your hands on. You better hurry so your food stocks will include all of your favorite goodies.

The urgency may not be quite that high but according to a recent CIA report, worldwide weather for the next forty years will be so poor that nations may engage in full-fledged wars to supply their people with food.

The CIA bases their report on the assumption that global weather will revert to a "Little Ice Age," the same climatic conditions that occurred between 1800 and 1850. In fact, the report goes, we have already entered the next "Ice Age." The report notes that crops in the early Sixties and the crop failures that affected India, Central Asia and the Soviet Union.

To further their claim, sub-Sahara Africa is pointed out. Six years straight and the total rainfall can be measured in tablespoons.

Closer to home, our neck of the woods is to be spared from such inclement conditions. But cooler weather could cut crop yields in Northern Europe and Canada.

To counter the CIA report some climatologists are predicting that instead we will see a warming trend caused by the many man-made pollutants that fill our air and attack the ozone. The atmosphere will have the same effect as a greenhouse.

Other climatologists contend that because of man-made interference, particularly from industrial air pollution, we will experience a period of quite unpredictable weather. It is possible that no long term planning will be possible.
What better way to spend a relaxing, air-conditioned summer's evening after a long, scorching day's relaxation under the sun, than to take in a motion picture — and what a summer film release line up there is this year! Ho hum.

There will be no giant white sharks to scare the hell out of us, no nostalgic looks at Hollywood in the '30s, no Berber chieftains to sweep us off to their desert palaces, nor any deal, dumb and blind pinball wizards to take us through a rock 'n' roll nightmare. However, this summer's film packages, for the most part, promise to be as exciting, if not more so, as a trailer clipping exhibition. Yet, for the sake of some of us (notably film buffs and serious film students) there are a few worthy films coming our way; ones which may have some merit and value — unlike the majority of 'B' flicks currently on the circuit. Those motion pictures which seem to be the most promising, either entertainment or value wise, include: "Buffalo Bill and the Indians," starring Paul Newman as the legendary scout is depicted as a drunken, philandering, sleazy showman who wears a wig and balds Indians. This is the latest contribution from Director Robert Altman since his last outing in "Nashville" and one more in the long line of westerns to help commemorate the Bicentennial.

With the success of "That's Entertainment!" a few years back, MGM has come up with another in "That's Entertainment! Part II." Hosted by two of MGM's top boxoffice attractions, Gene Kelly and Fred Astaire, "Part II" is yet another potpouri of MGM classics featuring Laurel and Hardy, Doris Day, Judy Garland, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers and countless others. I have a sneaking suspicion that "That's Entertainment! Part II" is a conglomeration of clips left over from or which didn't fit into "That's Entertainment." "Swashbuckler" transports us back to the days of Blackbeard, buried treasure and adventure on the high seas as Robert Shaw, James Earl Jones and Peter Boyle take on the roles of pirates. "Futurworld," yet another sequel, this to 1973's "Westworld," is one of the more promising science fiction films to appear this summer. It stars Peter Fonda, Byrle Danner and Yul Brenner. The latter in an encore performance of his "Westworld" role and was filmed largely in the NASA Space Center in Texas. The latest from the bizarre mind of Mel Brooks, "The Silent Movie," opens later this summer and if it's along the lines of his last two outings, "Blazing Saddles" and "Young Frankenstein," then we're sure to be in for another treat.

Michael York takes us on an escape from futuristic authorizations in "Logan's Run," another science fiction film which opens this month. Filmed in a new process said to cut down 3-D, lavish MGM settings and costuming, "Logan's Run" may very well be the kind of science fiction film every movie fan will want to see.

An all-star cast headed by Charles Heston, Henry Fonda, Glenn Ford and James Stewart in "Fort Apache," starring Lee Marvin as a rugged hombre in a raucous story set all the way through the turn of the century. "The Outlaw Josey Wales," a Clint Eastwood western overturning a former California legislative law to allow two more westerns to add to the all-star cast.

Two science fiction which are likely to play to packed-out crowds and to the big screen are American International Pictures' "At the Earth's Core" starring Douglas Fairbanks and Peter Cushing and H. G. Wells' "Food of the Gods" starring Marjoe Gortner, Ralph Meeker and Tisa Lupo. "Omen," a supernatural thriller along the lines of "The Other" and "The Exorcist" is sure to draw those who enjoyed the latter two.

For those who might like to see our own Seattle-Tacoma area once more up there on the big screen there is "Dandy, the All-American Girl" starring Stockard Channing as a car thief. "Dandy" was filmed here about this time last year. Rounding out the list of this summer's film releases are "Gator" with Burt Reynolds; "Blazing Saddles" and "Young Frankenstein," which don't sound too meritable or valuable. "Logan's Run" may very well be the kind of science fiction film worth the time of those who enjoy this type of entertainment.

Jazz Ensemble's last concert spirited

by Lars Rynning

HCC's Jazz Ensemble, led by Dutch Nordel, gave a spirited performance of electric jazz-rock May 28 in the Lecture Hall.

The hour-long concert was very tight and featured a selection of popular songs, with the audience's attention all the way through. Tickets for the concert are on sale at The Ron and suburban urban outlets.

The Concert Choir will feature soloists Dan Freeman and Bill Robertson in Handel's cantata, "O Sing unto The Lord." Transfer... The Manhattan Transfer stars of their own mini-series on CBS-Television last summer transfer their music to Paramount Northwest for a concert June 19 at 8:30 p.m. Dedicating to harmonizing their vocal styles, the group will perform their hits of the 60s and 70s. The Manhattan Transfer has been wooing packed houses across the country with a visual presentation that matches their vocal style. The concert was mainly made up of the kind of music that has been popular among college-age listeners. The concert was to be the last of this year's school performances for the group.

Norval said they usually play once per quarter for Highline students in addition to their performances in the community.

Instrumentalists in the ensemble are Jody Butler, Rick King, Steve Klein, bass; Jim Pitre, drums and percussion; and Dutch Nordel, key-board.

Summer films are almost here — ho hum

Summer films are almost here — ho hum.

The Skid Road Theatre is currently staging Garson Kanin's comedy, "Born Yesterday" through July 10.

The play is a classic of the American stage. It takes a critical look at "Big Business" in this case the porn business and the man who creates an empire by buying, stealing, blackmailing, cheating, bribing and theft. Set in Washington D.C. in 1946, where he has just arrived in insure that legislation favorable to his cause will be passed, the play follows the misadventures that plague him all because he has brought his mistress, a dumb blond, with him. He sets up his own downfall when he decides to have her educated so that she won't embarrass him in front of the legislators he is buying and bribing.

Last concert... HCC's Vocal Ensemble will join with the Girl's Sextet, Concert Choir and soloists to present a complimentary vocal concert Sunday at 1:15 p.m. in the Lecture Hall.

David Volks, director of the groups, stated that "They will perform this century secular selections, music of the Romanists, as well as the popular selections "Make Your Own Kind of Music" and "Tender Love.""
Bad Company pleasing; Doobie Brothers smoke

What happens when two parts of Peace, one part of Man and Hoople and one part of King Crimson are intermixed? The answer, of course, is Great Britain's newest supergroup, Bad Company.

Their recent sell-out Coliseum show was just about what I figured it would be — nothing too flashy or experimental, just straight forward rock & roll.

Bad Company's popularity has skyrocketed so much in just two years, after only three albums, that they have become one of the biggest bands in the world.

The prime reason why Bad Company is such a supergroup is lead singer and Paul Rodgers. His voice is the group's most influential instrument and he is noted as Mick Jagger and Rod Stewart's favorite singer — so you know he can hold a note. If it wasn't for Rogers the group would just be another ordinary rock band.

Bad Company began their concert with "Live for the Music," a lively tune from their new "Ruthless" album. They also played "Honey Child," "Youngblood" and the title track from their album. The only problem with the group throughout the concert was with Rogers' vocals; they were occasionally garbled and several screams leaked out of the sound system.

Some of the new established Bad Company performed were: "Shoutin' Star," "Feel Like Making Love," "Rock Steady," and can't get enough of you.

Besides Rogers on vocals, guitar and keyboard, the rest of the band is made up of Mick Ralphs on guitar, Simon Kirk on sax and the other side of Nordal's "double life." He trained at North Texas University, the largest music college stage band festivals and describes big band as being his favorite sound.

Nordal makes his guitar sound like a lead singer, but uses four guitars. He frequently travels throughout the U.S. playing acoustic and electric piano for college stage band festivals and describes big band as being his favorite sound.

Nordal plays locally in a jazz/rock band as well. He has played with Mickey Jackson, Jack Bruce, the Doobies and the Stones in addition to playing with groups such as classical or folk. He has worked with the Doobies, Lord, Rod Stewart and the Doobies.

Nordal enjoys free-lancing but is very selective in who he works with. "If I haven't heard their names I won't play with them," he says.

He screens his players carefully because he feels a group of several average players who are organized make a much stronger combination than a group of super players who are not organized.

Having played professionally for quite a few years, Nordal got his start in rock bands at 16, and at 21 became interested in jazz styles.

As future goals he would like to get deeper into music composition and publication. He wants to write classical as well as jazz material, and has immediate plans to write music for the Doobies, an instrument which he feels has great potential. The results of his efforts could be very interesting, too.

At the Highline Bookstore, a group of super players who are not organized.

Aberdeen and Jeff Baxter.

Yes, the Doobies did all of their smash hits from "Black Water," "Listen to the Music," "Take Me in Your Arms (Rock Me)," "Jesus Is Just Alright," to "Takin' It to the Streets." The two founders of Bad Company, Paul Rodgers and Mick Ralphs, show the camaraderie that has made them the number one new supergroup.

Nordal's other side exposed

JAZZ-ROCK PIANIST...Bunch Nordal wants to branch into jazz and classical music composition.

Most Highline students know Marine "Bunch" Nordal is the jazz instructor and ensemble leader, but not many to many is the other side of Nordal's "double life." Nordal plays professional with a great number of jazz and rock bands. In addition, he is busy composing music for jazz and jazz/rock instrumental groups.

He taught at North Texas University, the largest music school in the country and was schooled heavily in classical, jazz and rock and received degrees in composition. He also attended the Oscar Peterson school in Canada, an intensive study workshop held during summers.

He frequently travels throughout the U.S. playing acoustic and electric piano for college stage band festivals and describes big band as his favorite sound. Nordal plays locally in a jazz/rock band as well. He likes playing rock, but says that rock audiences are not generally interesting. He feels the same about pure jazz audiences, but enjoys playing a combination of jazz/rock, because the audiences are usually "young or young-minded people who understand the music.

In addition to his local group, Nordal also does a considerable amount of freelancing. He has worked with Gladys Knight, Jack Bruce, the Doobies and the Stones in addition to playing with groups such as classical or folk.

Bunch Nordal is a very talented musician both instrumentally and in composition. Instead of letting music shape his life he is shaping music.

Photographic works of Ansel Adams, the father of the epic landscape, and Richard Avedon, portrait professional, are currently on display at the Seattle Art Museum's Modern Art Pavilion.

Adams' photographs are indescribable. They seem much closer to paintings than photographs. His prints draw one's eye directly toward the center of the photo without any effort. He is the envy of photographers the world over. The author of several books, Adams' works have been printed in thousands of magazines and books.

As a 14-year-old piano student from San Francisco in 1916, Adams visited Yosemite Valley, and fell in love with the landscape. He wanted to recreate the beauty of what he saw and did this through a camera lens.

No photographer's work is more widely reproduced. Four years ago one of his prints could be purchased for $25; last year that print sold for $800, and by last September the cost rose to $500. At the beginning of this year, one print went for $1,000.

His display consists almost totally of nature landscapes: contrasting trees; majestic, snowy mountain ranges; rivers and strange graveyards.

Adams' photos make me, like many others, want to throw away my camera lens. No one else can duplicate the style Adams perfects. His talent is his one fault. It could be an experience that is both profitable and enjoyable to all.

Richard Avedon is widely known through his photographic circles for his bizarre and distorted portraits of celebrities, politicians and film directors. His unusual portraits are reflections of his own images: grotesque and sometimes humorous. Avedon once shot Bill Buckley looking troubled and flabbergasted.

His photographic works now have on view until film directors. His unusual portraits are reflections of his own images: grotesque and sometimes humorous. Avedon once shot Bill Buckley looking troubled and flabbergasted.

Avedon enlarges his photographic engravings enormously, using the same negative rather round and puffy. Bill Buckley looks troubled and confused in this portrait. His celebrity photos are more revealing than what one is accustomed to seeing. He distorts Eisenhowers' face to be rather round and pudgy, while Adams leaves one flabbergasted.

Avedon's photos will be on display until July 13 and Adams' will be on view until June 13. Admission price is 30 cents for students.

Women’s tennis wraps up season

Highline Community College’s women’s tennis team completed their season by winning the conference title in Pasco. In the Northwest Community Tournament in Pasco, the team won the conference title with an undefeated record, expected to form the nucleus of next year’s squad. Coach Marge Darling said, “Our team is not only talented, but also competitive, which is why we won the conference title.”

Several high school seniors from both the NPSL and the Seamount leagues have expressed considerable interest in attending Highline and playing on next year’s team. “Similar to most community college athletic programs, each year is like starting over. Without letters of intent or athletic scholarships, you don’t know who the potential recruits will be,” said Coach Command.

“Even then it is still a long time before Spring Quarter and the tennis season. Several changes in the competitive format are expected for next year. Most community colleges in this area will again participate in the Northern Community College Tournament. The divisional alignments for the tournament will be decided at the June conference meeting. The parent organization, the Northwest College Women’s Sports Association, voted to completely revise the competitive format because of the close but players were restricted to the number four, two and one singles slot. Most of the incoming players have had experience in both singles and doubles, which will also help,” Coach Command added. This year only three singles and two doubles were played but players were restricted to only one event. The tournament will also be played under the “no-oo” scoring system. At the June meeting the conference is expected to adopt the same format.

Men’s tennis takes division

The Highline College men’s tennis team is in the second year in a row, Southern division, champions of the Northwest Conference of the NWAACC. The T-birds just missed the top, however, finishing a close fourth in the conference playoffs. Highline finished behind Ft. Steilacoom, Green River, and Yakima, in that order.

It was an ironic ending, as HCC beat both Yakima and Ft. Steilacoom, losing to Yakima and Yakima, in that order. Darrell Darling, who played third singles until a knee injury forced him to the sidelines just before the conference playoffs, is also a freshman. Frank Haydon, number two, and Darrell Darling, number one, finished fourth in doubles at the northwest tournament. The tournament will also feature singles and doubles, with players eligible to compete in both events.

“Although the new format will only require six players and no doubles, I think these changes will help us this season and probably won’t help us in the tournament. This year’s team would have been even stronger under the new format because of the close competition for the third singles slot. Most of the incoming players have had experience in both singles and doubles, which will also help,” Coach Command added. Hockey is Canada’s national sport. But the brutality is putting a bad taste in the mouths of even the most diehard hockey fans. During the just-concluded playoffs, fighting was noticeably absent. Fred Shere, coach of the brawling Philadelphia Flyers, said this was a result of the teams not wanting to take any “needless penalties.” I suspect this was a result of the respective teams getting down to pure hockey and the championship at stake.

Needless to say, the playoffs, minus the “mini-rumbles,” were most entertaining. Philadelphia, the defending champs, and Montreal, perennial powerhouse, locked horns in a most unforgettable series. Even though the Canadians swept the series, every game was a tight battle of the best hockey this reporter has seen played in ages. Hopkins' life - a continual tour

by Hal Bomer

As we head into the summer months, the Seattle SuperSons will be making a few changes. Why? The changes are needed to improve (and the rich to get richer), the N.B.A. college draft, occurs next Tuesday, June 4.

In Seattle, the best authority on this matter is Bob Hopkins, the Sonics' assistant coach and head scout. I talked to Hopkins about the Sonics' draft, some other NBA developments, and the Sonics' role as the big guard. All of the team's pros, basketball, the Sonics are the only team without a big guard. Hopkins elaborated:

"This should be our best draft ever.

"Out of all the teams we play, they all have at least one, maybe two big guards. Guys like Quinn Buckner of Indiana, Mark Daniels of Tech, John Lucas of Marquette, A-1 Fleming of Vanderbilt will all be on weight training programs. I don't really know how serious they are, but they are concerned about their weight. We will definitely see a lot of competition out there this year."

"There will definitely be a lot of competition out there this year.

"I caught a flight into Baltimore for the new coaches' clinic and drove to College Park, just in time for the Maryland-Wake Forest game. The next day, I went to Penn State to watch Coppers State. The next day, I went to Manhattan to watch the Sonics travel to New York City. There, I watched a big game between the Knicks and the Bullets."

"I nearly hot-dogged myself to death."

Coach Hopkins may have set a record for most miles traveled by an NBA assistant coach while on scouting trips this year. We asked him what an ordinary trip entails."

"I think there are a lot of outstanding small college players available this year."

"I caught a flight into Honolulu on the day before the Draft. In Honolulu, I met with new Sonics guard, Butch Fehro."

"Some of them come in with a few problems. But we'll have to make a choice.

"That means we'll have to do more on the courts."

"For a guard, we look for someone with quickness, stamina, and shooting ability. If they show they are fighters, they can show them to fight through picks and play defense. This season, we have to make sure we don't give them a shot."

"Some guys shouldn't go on this year. They score 25-30 points a game and they are ready for the big time. But when they find out here, they sit on the bench. It is difficult to show their lack of maturity.

"The Sonics are usually fairly active in the trade. Hopkins doesn't feel that will occur this year."

"That doesn't mean we aren't interested in some of them."

"I've been impressed by a lot of college players. A lot of them probably never heard of. Guys like Larry Wright, Brandon Perrott of Forrest of Grand Canyon, and Evan Davis of Southern Mississippi will be in the league for years to come."

"Some players like Mo Howard of Marquette, Willie Smith of Missouri, and Al Fleming of Arizona. These guys were hard to pick."

"Guys like Quinn Buckner of Indiana, Mark Daniels of Tech, John Lucas of Marquette, and Larry Jackson of Delaware."

"Guys from the Midwest... we didn't pick many this year."

"Guys I don't think we'll see this year."

"If someone is thinking about the Sonics, we'll have to make a choice."

"Guys thinking about the Sonics should be next, followed by Larry Jackson, who I think will be chosen. We will have to look at them.

"That's part of the Sonics' life. They have to play with whatever they have."

"I think we could have had a better chance for the first pick."

"I think there are a lot of outstanding small college players available this year."

"I flew back to Dallas to down to North Texas State to watch the NCAA regional.
Season wrap-up: HCC concludes another impressive year

by Hal Benner

Even though they captured the NWAACC championships this year, HCC proved to be among the best CC sports teams in the area. The way they led with second place finishes in cross country, volleyball, and track and field, the women's swimming team took third place in the state, and the women's basketball team topped the NPS championships. Both the men's and women's tennis teams finished first in the South Division of the Coastal conference, and the men's swimming team finished fourth at the NWAACC championships.

The T-bird volleyball team improved on their third place finish of the previous year with their second place record. Coach Eileen Broome said that "with many returning players next year, coupled with the prospect of getting some top local high school performers, I don't see how we can miss."

"We did have some outstanding players," she continued. "Dan Anderson set a school 100-yard breaststroke record in 1:02.79, and a personal best in the 200-yard breaststroke in 2:19.4. Cuth set personal bests in three events: the 100 butterfly (58.2), the 200 butterfly (2:01.5), and the 200 individual medley. Cuth's times were also second best in school history.

While the men were putting on their show, the women lost to the powerhouse of the NPS championships. Shannon Barrett won the 50, 100, and 200 breaststroke pool record times. Her 50 and 100 times were conference records, and all three were against us for the national."

Ann McDonald set school records in the 200, 500, and 1650 freestyle, and Ellis Channing, along with Cindy Johnson in the 100, were also second place in the state AA basketball title. However, fine individual efforts were turned in by Hina Vicors and Jan Kochel. However, as the quality of girls high school basketball improves, coach Wooding hopes to add new members to HCC's three-year-old women's program.

The HCC track team turned their second place finish at the NWAACC championships into a first place finish in the South Central two-mile. Wallick was undefeated for his second season, allowing opponents to score only twice during his entire track season. On his way to winning the South Central Community College Wrestling Championship in his weight class, Wallick is returning next season.

For men's basketball, Head Coach Dennis Ross indicated that the team's "can't win anywhere between two and 15 games." Apparently he was right. For the team's entire season, the men's basketball team was a consistent player."

Rick Adams captured the NWAACC 3 and 4 mile titles. "Sandy Seana, who was probably our overall fastest runner, most consistent performer. Lad Murray, who once missed some service points, was our best server. John Hardy, our third place finisher (1:01.4), had the most consistent player," Coach Wooding expressed his hopes for next season. "All I say is, 'Next year.'"

Leading our men's tennis team was Ismau Segawa, third place finisher (77 lbs.), and Bob Ross, fourth place finisher (100 lbs.). Segawa and Hardy are returning next season. "We have a new coach coming in next year (Fred Harrison), former HCC player and Cleveland High School mentor) and with the addition of some good halfbacks to complement our returners, we should be very competitive."

Among those returning are Pete Mezich and Lyke Otten. They will miss leading scorer Gary MacDonaldd. Following a streak when the team had six games, the men's basketball team went into a scoring slump and dropped their last four games, finishing with a 5-10 record. Eileen Broome, women's track coach, stressed defense this season, but it wasn't enough as the women were outplayed by taller and deeper squads. However, fine individual efforts were turned in by Hina Vicors and Jan Kochel. However, as the quality of girls high school basketball improves, coach Wooding hopes to add new members to HCC's three-year-old women's program.

The men's and women's tennis teams won the South Central Two Miler and the NWAACC championship. The men's team finished the previous year with their second place record in the 100-yard breaststroke and their second place finish at the NWAACC championships.

Next season should prove to be a banner year as a flock of runners return. Eugene, Tim Smith, and Dan Escalona in the sprint, Steve Johnson and Mark Mawry in the middle distance events, and Paul Eichenberger, and Greg Stailey in the distance events, are returning. "I'm just hoping the quality of men's tennis at Highline will continue to rise."

All year long, coach Comdy shuffled her talented line up in an effort to give everyone a turn on the court. She plan backed itself in the end as they finished third at the championships.

Many good freshmen players broke into the line-up this year. Haley Ocha, Debbie Nall, Pam Bethman, Sandy Imes, and Donna Salles. But Joan Seeley and Liz Murphy will still be missed.

New basketball coach named

Fred Harrison, former Highline College student and basketball coach at Seattle's Cleveland High School, was named head men's basketball coach by Athletic Director Don McGannugh, on Friday, May 20. Harrison replaces Dennis Ross, who resigned at the end of this season for personal reasons.

Harrison led Cleveland to the state AA basketball title last year and the state AAAA title this year. His men's coaching record is 123 wins and 25 losses, or a winning percentage of 84.7. Harrison attended Highline College in 1964 and 1965, and played on the basketball team both years. The '64 team placed third in state, and '65 team placed second.

Harrison said he was glad to make the step up from high school. "I feel it will be different to work with people on an even basis that he formerly knew only as 'Coach."

What happened to student government?

Analysis

by Greg Lebek

Most of the problems of student government are very clear for the members. It is very difficult to get their jobs done, to function, and to complete the many hours of work required. The student government is a very large organization, and the members have to work together to make it work. In the past, the student government has had a good reputation, and the members have been respected. However, in recent years, the government has become less effective and has been criticized for its inefficiency.

The most discouraging thing about the student government is that members have trouble working together. The collective bargaining process has been slow and often ineffective. The members are often in conflict with each other, and this makes it difficult to get things done.

Many members of the student government are young and inexperienced, and this can make it hard for them to function effectively. The government also faces many challenges, such as budget constraints and a lack of resources. These issues make it difficult for the government to carry out its duties.

However, there are also positive aspects of the student government. The members work hard and are committed to their responsibilities. The government is also a valuable resource for the university community, providing a forum for discussion and a means of addressing student concerns.

As the Seventies drag along, it appears that even less people are involved in student government. The government is a very exclusive group of about a hundred people, and it is not easy to get involved. Many members of the government are not interested in participating, and this makes it difficult for the government to function effectively.

Student programs are currently being re-organized, and this has led to a lot of confusion and uncertainty. The government is working to address these issues, and it is hoped that the re-organization will lead to a more effective government.

Students receive honors

The Annual Student Awards Ceremony was held recently, and nearly a hundred members of the Associated Student Body were honored for their achievements.

The Associated Student Body, Senator Mary Sachs, takes a brief from her job. Mary Sachs is a member of an exclusive group of about a hundred people, and it is not easy for her to get involved. Many members of the government are not interested in participating, and this makes it difficult for the government to function effectively.

The government is working to address these issues, and it is hoped that the re-organization will lead to a more effective government. In the future, the government will be able to focus on its core responsibilities and improve its effectiveness.

New officers elected

Because of the fiscal deficit, there were no officers elected last spring. However, the officers elected this spring are working hard to improve the situation. The government is working on a new constitution that will be presented to the students for approval.
