Herpes virus grows, epidemic proportions

by Denise Chanez

In Greek "herpes" means to creep, and that's exactly what herpesviruses are doing: "Creeping into today's society."

The Washington State Department of Social & Health Services has estimated that 300,000 people in the United States will have a genital herpes infection this year. The viruses will be contacted by men and women of all age groups.

Studies show that there are a minimum of five herpesviruses infecting humans today...

- Herpes Zoster
- Cytomegalovirus
- Epstein — Barr virus
- Herpes Simplex viruses type one (Oral)
- Herpes Simplex viruses type two (Genital)

A person can be infected by more than one herpesvirus at one time. Exposure to these viruses usually occurs at a young age and becomes latent in the majority of those exposed.

In a recent article which appeared in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer researchers claimed that herpes simplex virus could remain infectious for hours on toilet seats and towels.

Other researchers disagree with that theory saying, once the virus is exposed to the dry open air it will die shortly after because of the lack of food.

The most common types of herpes is herpes simplex type one and herpes simplex type two. Both of these viruses are becoming the basis for major research programs.

In past years, herpes was not a disease that was commonly seen at HCC's health clinic. Today there are about three cases seen each week, according to Mary Lou Holland, Health Services coordinator at HCC.

In both herpes simplex type one and two, the primary infection is always the most severe. There is great discomfort where the outbreak is located.

Many people experience fever, headaches, backaches, pain, or tingling of the legs with their first herpes infection. The preceding outbreaks usually just have burning and itching sensations.

Often, the only symptom of the initial outbreak is painful burning at the site of the lesion (blister) formation.

Each herpes case varies in degree of severeness depending on the state of health and well-being each individual is in. The more stress a person is under, the more severe the outbreak.

It is important to take care of one's physical and mental health. Being run down makes you more vulnerable to herpes infections, claimed Holland.

Student constitution 'improved' by changes

by Bob Ridge

The members of the Highline College Student Union have completed rewriting and revising their council's constitution. Their purpose was to correct several inconsistent and outdated sections of the document.

Keith Johnson, HCSU Council chairman, said that several changes in policy and organization of the student union made it necessary to revise and update the constitution. He noted that the last major revision of the constitution was several years ago.

"The constitution fits the council where it didn't before," he noted.

Several major changes added in the revision include the restructuring of the Programs Board by-laws and the clarification of the membership recall procedures.

"It was basic housekeeping," said council member Thomas Jackson, who played a major role in the constitutional corrections.

The Programs Board committees, including the scheduling of community events, concerts, films, and dances, were reorganized into what Johnson called a more efficient structure.

The new recall section added to the constitution clarifies and details the requirements that must be met before a representative can be removed from office, according to Johnson. He said that the procedures had not been thoroughly detailed in the original constitution.

The student council met several times a week over the last quarter to rewrite the constitution. For each section introduced, the approval of the council members was required.

Another result of the revision will include the reorganization of the Council board, and will clarify the members' functions.

It was also decided to hold the Council elections several weeks earlier, instead of the beginning of May. This according to Johnson, will allow more time for the newly elected officials to be introduced and orientated to Council procedures.

Johnson said that although the changes are mostly internal and will not have a direct effect on the Highline student body, the revisions may strengthen student confidence in the HSCU.

Indochinese benefits hit from all sides

by Caroline Bleakley

Highline Community College Indochinese refugee students are in jeopardy of losing their benefits.

The refugees are allowed 540 hours of schooling, which is equivalent to about six months, funded by the Department of Social Health Services. After this 540 hours the refugees can no longer stay in the refugee classes, unless they can get a basic grant, and this is only if they are at a high enough level, "most refugees are not ready at six months," said Marge Kennedy, teacher in the refugee program.

Kennedy also mentioned that the welfare program is threatening to cut out the refugees benefits after 18 months, "I don't know what's going to happen to them," said Kennedy, "the refugees are extremely worried about this cut."

The refugees are from Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam, with the majority from Saigon. "They catch on quickly to the language," said Kennedy, and she has tuned her ear to their speaking, over the past six years since the refugee program started.

There are some Hmong and Mien people who are also known as the "Hill People." They are farmers from the country, with no previous education. They had no modern conveniences, and no written language, "you have to start at zero with these people," commented Kennedy.

There are 125 students in the program, they attend classes nine hours a week. Before the budget cuts it was 20 hours a week. When the program first started there were eight teachers, now there are five.

The refugees need jobs and are willing to work. "They are very ambitious people," said Kennedy. Some of the refugees were professional people in their country, but they are willing to take any jobs that are available here such as yard work and house cleaning.

Some of the refugees have left to other states such as Louisiana, California, and especially Texas. "They know someone who has gotten a job there, so they think they can get a job too. Many times they put themselves in a worse situation," said Kennedy.

Some of the refugees are machinery and welding graduates. These types of jobs aren't abundant but are offered in other states.

The use of a piece of privately owned property was given to six families who helped put up a fence and did some odd jobs. The families are now planting gardens on the land. Kennedy commented that the refugees are "excellent farmers."

There will be an Indochinese cultural fair on June 3, from 10 a.m. until 3 p.m., on the main sidewalk in front of Bldg. 6. There will be crafts, artwork, dancing, music, food, and native costumes.

Campus pool sharks shot many a ball Wednesday in Highline's Pool Tournament.

The game was eight-ball by double elimination, more commonly referred to as two out of three.

HCSU Programs Board sponsored the tournament and charged each player a $1 entry fee.

First and second place plaques were awarded to Howard Bray and Dave Christianson, respectively.

WANTED: Food bandit – hungry or stuffed

by Trish Armstrong

Today's lunchroom specials are the roast turkey, baked ham, roast beef and corned beef sandwiches, accompanied by an excellent performance by the food bandit.

What started out as an amusing side-show, turned into a daily activity of stealing.

Since the beginning of Winter quarter, Jennifer Parrish and Debbie Borland, sophomores at Highline, have witnessed the actual thief, or as they call him "Lunchroom Bandit."

"He's pro at it," said Parrish. "At first we noticed that he didn't pay for the french fries he ordered," she added. "We thought it was a joke."

Borland and Parrish continued to look for the food bandit and view his inexpensive techniques for a meal, which hasn't been a profit for food services.

"It's gotten to be a routine for him," noted Parrish.

The daily stroll down the food counters occurs between 11 a.m. and noon. Casually, the food bandit walks back and forth from the grill to the deli-side of the serving bar.

"He usually pours some pop and drinks up to three or four cups," Parrish observed. Prices for the pop are 40, 50 and 60 cents. A weekly sum total for the beverages is expensive.

Cranberry juice seems to be what he usually drinks.

In the last spying of the food bandit's spree, it was noticed that a doughnut was quickly eaten while awaiting his 75 cent french fry order.

After receiving the fries, hesitation is part of the procedure. The food bandit nonchalantly looks over the food display as to make sure his five finger discount has not been discovered.

With fries and beverage in hand, he goes up the stairs towards the lounge, once again mastering another theft.

Both Borland and Parrish stated that the only thing they have seen him pay for was a bagel with cream cheese, priced at 45 cents.

The identity of the food bandit is only known by Parrish. She says she went to school with him at Decatur High School.

"I can't remember his name, but I know he went to my school," she said.

"This misdemeanor can fine the food bandit for $1,000 and or a year in the county jail," stated Jack Chapman, director of campus security.

According to Chapman, Jess Caskey could suspend the food bandit from school and make a notation of the crime on his transcript.

There may be more than one "Lunchroom Bandit," but with a penalty so stiff, it may be easier to bring a sack lunch to school.

Bookstore provides service to students

by Jeff Hermesen

"We're here as a service to the students," said Merna Trowbridge, manager of Highline's bookstore for the past 15 years. "The bookstore operates on a very slim profit margin and 5 percent of the incoming gross must go toward the facilities account, paying the employees, the janitorial services, and then any needed utilities and fixtures."

The bookstore has always been a self-supporting outfit and has almost always been able to make a small profit to put back into buying more supplies.

"The 10 best selling stationary items are sold at close to cost," Trowbridge stated. While most self-supporting businesses operate at a minimum of a 40 percent mark-up the bookstore is selling bookbags and shirts at about a 20 percent mark-up and textbooks at about 30 percent.

The bookstore tries to get its merchandise at the lowest possible price. "We try to get good quality and we guarantee all of our merchandise," Trowbridge said.

The bookstore is a member of the Northwest College Bookstore Association. By combining the buying in quantity, all 50 schools can make individual orders and have the books sent directly to the bookstores.

Highline's bookstore continues to operate in spite of the recession.

Throughout the years the bookstore has been operated independently from the college, and whether it is in a portable or the luxurious spot it now occupies, the bookstore has provided service to the students and faculty of Highline Community College.

Revisions improve student constitution

"They (the students) might get a little respect for us when we operate under correct by-laws," he said.

Other changes include an expanded section on campus clubs and associations. Their operating and funding procedures are now clearly defined, according to Jackson.

"We gave them guidelines," he said.

Jackson said that the new constitution should remain workable for several years, unless changing time and events force another revision. He stressed that the corrections have greatly improved the constitution, and said that the changes should remain in effect for some time.

"I think it's going to work," he said. "I don't think they (the future council members) can change that much on it."

Long Live The Hispanic

A homemade flour tortilla with beans, chili, meat and anything else you'd like to add makes a delicious burrito.

Like other races there is a deep fellowship among each other. Yet, the true heritage of these people seem to drive them harder to excel in whatever they do.

Mexico is now used for festival dancing and decorations.

Today many children are being made aware of their heritage at an early age. Not only in their family-life but also at school.

No hispanic meal is complete without chili. The hotter, the better!

At one time, the hispanic women were very sheltered from today's world. After living a few years in the United States they adopted some of the "Today's American Women" characteristics. But not forgetting their heritage.

Diver emerges to project supervision position

by Theresa Jones

From the deepmurky saltwaters off the Des Moines Marina emerges Lee Christopherson to assist Highline water nymphs of the diving program.

Cited for a part time position by Gina Erikson of the natural science department, Christopherson finds that helping his fellow students is very rewarding.

"He showed a willingness to be responsible and shows a great amount of skill," Erikson said.

Presently Christopherson is organizing all dives for the diving program at Highline. The students are doing a base line study for the city of Des Moines as an environmental impact statement for the artificial reef off Des Moines Marina.

"The program is really good for everyone," Christopherson explained, "the students get into the water and get experience at diving, the community benefits without having to put money into the project, and the people are really interested."

"It's a nice deal because it ties in the natural science division and the marine technician division," he added.

Christopherson has been working on the artificial reef project since last year as a student and now supervises the other students.

"I stayed on the project and just grew into the position," stated Christopherson.

"He showed a great amount of ability," said Bev Paske, co-op job developer, "and so was rewarded with the position."

Christopherson now acts as Highline's liaison with the city of Des Moines in the reef project, and is the safety officer on the project.

Recently it was announced that the reef project might be discontinued because of the budget cutbacks.

"If one party of the project backs out then the whole project dies," explained Christopherson. "The program depends on both the city of Des Moines and the college working together."

If the reef project is cancelled, Christopherson plans to continue on with the diving program and get his degree.

Christopherson plans on getting his Masters degree in Marine Technology to apply towards research.

When not going to classes or diving, Christopherson captains a small vessel for the Coast Guard. He has been a Coast Guard Reserve for the last four years and intends to stay in the Coast Guard for at least 12 more years.

Christopherson hopes to someday have his own sea command with the Coast Guard, and to be able to retire by the age of 30. Afterwards, he is considering building his own boat and sailing to different places around the world.

"I like responsibility," Christopherson said, "and I think that working with the Coast Guard and what I'm doing at Highline compliment each other."

Democrat Bland seeks election to new congressional post

Several state politicians have already announced their campaigns to be elected next fall as Washington's eighth congressional representative. A Democrat candidate spoke Wednesday on the Highline College campus about her political goals and beliefs.

Beth Bland, currently serving her second term as mayor of Mercer Island, announced her candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Congress on May 14. She faces difficult competition from Republican challengers Bob Eberle and Rod Chandler, both veterans of the state Legislature.

Although the controversial redistricting plan was intended to favor Republican candidates, Bland said she believes that a Democratic victory is still possible in the Eighth District.

"I think it's a year when people stop supporting Reagan and go in another direction," she said. "I don't think that the Republican Party is meeting the needs of this state."

Bland discussed several campaign issues, including her support of the controversial proposal calling for an immediate ban on the production of atomic weapons.

"Instead of being safer with nuclear weapons, we are in fact less safe," she observed. "I don't think we could have a limited nuclear war and survive."

She also stressed her belief that the government is not doing enough to help solve the problems of the economy.

"Jobs are a big issue, and the policies of the present administration are just not working," Bland noted. "It's hard to convince the unemployed to support Reaganomics."

Bland also said that "we need coherent governmental policies toward business. To say that government doesn't belong in the business field is wrong."

She mentioned that high interest rates, recession, and the decline of America's international competitiveness are some of the underlying problems of the economy. To restore the country's economic health, Bland said that a new partnership must be formed between industry, labor and business that would encourage capital investment and growth.

But Bland said that in her opinion, the Republicans have failed in their attempts to correct America's disabled economy.

"There's no doubt that many people are out of work and that there are more bankruptcies than ever," she noted. "We need to help them, not cut them off."

Student clubs are easy to form

Forming a club or organization at Highline is easy, according to Denny Steussy, student activities advisor.

"The key is to be organized. The basic criterion are to have at least three people, an advisor, and a simple constitution," he said.

Some currently active clubs include Killing as an Organized Sport, Phi Theta Kappa, and the Secret Organization which honors students, faculty, and staff for contributions beyond the call of duty.

"The Black Student Union, American Indians' Association, and Veterans' Club are going strong," according to Steussy.

The Soccer and Ski Clubs also seem to have high interest among students. However, as Steussy pointed out, "Clubs are seasonal. They're active part of the year and almost disappear at other times."

The List is a club still in the process of organization. "John Deorsky (who came up with the idea) wants to form a club where people can meet and socialize without having to go to a big kegger," said Steussy.

A new Pep Staff is also in the works. The plan is to have two components, a group of cheerleaders and a group of people interested in promoting school spirit.

According to Steussy, there has been too much controversy over cheerleaders in the past. People thought it was a popularity contest.

To solve this problem the group wants to stress having both cheerleaders and strong supporters on the Pep Staff. They want to generate excitement and team support.

In the past years, there have been clubs for almost everything imaginable. Clubs in nursing, respiratory therapy, computers, data processing, restaurants, innkeepers, and fashion merchandising majors have been formed to find out who else is in the programs and has similar interests.

Other clubs of the past include: a Weight Loss Group, Gay Student Organization, Circle K (a service group), different ethnic groups, a Disco Club, Motorcycle, skydiving, karate, fencing, Ping Pong, Chess, Photography, Hiking, and Young Democrats' Club (never any Republicans though), and even a Sasquatch Research Club.

"You should know your partner. Ask them if they've ever had herpes," she said. "You shouldn't feel dumb asking. It might save you from having problems later," she added.

If you do have herpes, doctors advise careful cleaning of the infected area. After contact with the infected area, thorough washing of the hands is required so one does not accidentally infect or expose another area of the body with a herpes lesion.

When one or more herpes lesion is present, doctors advise abstaining from sexual contact because the virus is present in the lesion and is easily transmitted to other people.

There is no known cure for herpes. But, there are ways to treat the viruses to relieve pain. Many doctors recommend warm sitz baths, three to five times a day.

Rx Zovirax, a prescription drug is recommended to apply on affected areas to reduce pain and prevent bacterial infections of the lesions. This cream costs about $20, and is recommended to be used by first time genital herpes victims.

Any woman with a history of herpes should have a Pap Smear every year because she has a greater chance of getting cervical cancer.

A pregnant woman should tell her doctor of any past herpes infection and of any current symptoms. An active infection could cause serious problems for the baby and could even result in its death.

There are many places to get help and information on herpes. The closest health professional is right in the health clinic in Bldg. 6.

At the clinic people can receive free, confidential diagnosis and counseling.

"There is one good point about herpes," claimed Holland, "At least it doesn't cause sterility."

Thunderations

God save us from a Brave New World

by R.W. Davolt

beginning of this legacy of ignorance.

The Seattle Times recently published a composite picture of the next generation, put together from the results of a Gallup Youth Survey covering the values, habits, beliefs, likes and dislikes. The composite boy is "Michael" and the composite girl is "Jennifer," which just happens to be the favorite names of those surveyed.

As is traditional, I find my successors frightening.

Their entertainment is electronic. Video games and TV fill their free time, and suck up their money which for Michael averages about $25 a week and $20 for Jennifer.

Jennifer prefers soft rock-Top 40 music and her favorite group is Styx. Michael is into hard rock and prefers AC/DC. His music they burn in Bellevue shopping center parking lots and hers they run backwards for the hidden satanic messages.

Michael and Jennifer oppose the legalization of marijuana and don't smoke cigarettes or drink alcohol. That's not to say they haven't tried pot, tobacco and strong drink, they are just not regular users.

Michael would like to see more sexual freedom and holds liberal views on premarital sex. Jennifer, on the other hand, is more strongly in favor of making contracep-

For every generation comes the dreadful time when they are expected to turn the world over to what they are convinced is a younger, inept, and lamentably unprepared generation. They carefully examine and scrutinize their successors, as if their disapproval will stop the process.

The only effort more foolish than trying to stop time is trying to warn the next generation about the pratfalls to come. They will listen as well as you listened to your elders, and as well as they listened to theirs, since the tives available to teen-agers.

Both want their marriage partner to be a virgin.

Both can quickly identify Robin Williams as the actor who plays "Mork" but struggle to identify the Vice President or Secretary of State of the United States.

They will not know who sends them to war or destroys their life savings but at least they'll know what channel to watch the reruns on.

Because they both plan to go to college, our American composite youth feel it is important to get good grades in secondary school. Good grades in high school, as we all know, assures success in college and guarantees success and happiness in life.

What have we done to education? Why is the purpose of education always in an epheral future? When will we learn simply because we love knowledge and thought instead of collecting degrees to inflate our net worth?

Michael and Jennifer are strongly religious souls, as well. They are members of a church and consider the church an important influence on their lives. Both believe that responsibility, self-respect, and honesty are important qualities for their generation to learn. Note that these are important for their generation, not necessarily for themselves.

If this average is accurate, I can only be secretly delighted. Michael and Jennifer are ignorant, inarticulate, and religious — and therefore easily controlled. It makes my multi-year plan to rule the world ever so much easier.

Michael and Jennifer have narrow, bigoted views of a world they know little about. What's more, they have no desire to know any more than they know right now. They are proudly ignorant.

They are ripe for authoritarian rule. They want a simple life easy to understand. Like the Germany of the 30's, their only overriding concern is if the trains run on time.

As for turning over my world to the Michaels and the Jennifers in some 50-odd years...they will have to tear it out of my hands.

Prayers should stay in church

by Bob Ridge

President Reagan recently declared his support for a constitutional amendment that would allow group prayers in public schools. This proposal could have a dangerous impact on freedom of religion and the separation of church and state.

The Founding Fathers, religious men themselves, realized the dangers of state-sponsored, state-controlled religion, and wrote into their new constitution the complete separation of government from religion. Religious views, they felt, should be left entirely in the hands of the individual, his family, and his ministers.

The famous clause in the First Amendment which states that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," was created to insure the individual's choice of religion. Even though America is predominantly Christian, faiths of every size and nature were permitted to exist and grow, creating an atmosphere of religious tolerance unequalled in the history of mankind.

But ever since the 1962 Supreme Court ruling that declared school prayers unconstitutional, a movement has grown among religious leaders to pass an amendment that would restore group prayers to the public schools. Unfortunately, these ministers have a basic misconception about how religion should be developed.

There is absolutely nothing preventing individual prayers in school today. No teacher will ever slap down a student for saying a prayer. This is a guarantee of our freedom of religion. The real issue is whether or not religious instruction should be given in class.

True, the proposed amendment would be strictly voluntary. But would a nine-year-old child really remain silent as his teacher, the great figure of authority in his young life, encouraged him to pray? Without religious teaching from his family or his church, would he really understand what was happening?

And just imagine the effect of peer pressure on those who would choose not to pray. They would be taunted and mocked for not praying, accused by their classmates of going straight to Hell. What effect will this have on young, impressionable minds?

And the children of other faiths — Moslem, Jewish, Hindu — how will they be treated? Probably as non-Christian heathens. It could very well destroy the religious tolerance which has existed so long and so well in our country.

Religion should be left to the family and the church. There it will grow and prosper, as is its right. Knowledge and facts should be the school's province, to instruct students about the natural world around them.

The two complement each other perfectly. The school for the mind, the church for the soul. Let it be so.

HCSU Column

Student council reflects on programs, meetings

by Keith Johnson

Since it is the end of the year and the last HCSU column, it seems only fitting and proper that we look over the past year and ask the burning question, "So what DID Student Council do last year anyway?" A look at the minutes over the last year provides some answers.

First, we created the Programs Board. They were, and will be, responsible for films, dances, speakers, and other presentations on campus such as the annual Variety Show.

We also updated our constitution and by-laws to better fit the operation of the HCSU. These revised documents will allow the Council to run more smoothly, since we will not have to operate under documents written five years ago.

We held a "town-hall meeting" last fall concerning the educational budget cuts with state legislators defending and attacking the cuts, and students attacking or defending the legislators. Along the same line, we have established an open line of communication with the Board of Trustees, with two breakfasts with this years and next years council members.

Unfortunately, there are less positive aspects of our work. This past year we decided to eliminate the Cheerleading program, although we did recognize Pep Staff as an HSCU organization later in the year. We also supported the funding of a nurse at the beleaguered Health Center, although that request would later be defeated.

But we have, in a sense, paved the way for some progress. We achieved our informal goal of getting five percent student participation in Spring Elections. And we have succeeded in modifying portions of the student lounge to allow for the placement of more video games next year, with increased revenue being the result. The more revenue we can generate in-house, with less students being able to attend next year, the more activities we will be able to fund.

So regardless of how the question "Is student council effective?" might be answered, these have been the things that the HSCU has accomplished during the last year. It is our hope that next years council will be able to carry on in the tradition of councils past. (No wisecracks about past council's efficiency, please.)

Good Luck!!

Betty Strehlau retires after 20 year career

by Bob Ridge

After 20 years of service to Highline College, communications instructor Betty Strehlau has retired. During her career, she helped develop Highline's young journalism class into a respected and honored department.

When she was hired in the fall of 1962, Strehlau became the first advisor for HCC's student newspaper, the Thunderword. For almost two decades, she worked closely with students in forming and guiding HCC's journalism classes.

"It's been a very important part of my life," she said. "I'm going to miss working with the students."

A graduate of the University of Washington, Strehlau worked in several business related jobs before being offered an instructor's position at Highline. The offer gave her an opportunity to return to the field of journalism which, she said, has captivated her since her elementary school days.

For a short time after college, Strehlau was the co-owner of a local Seattle newspaper. She also entered the field of advertising and public relations, and has worked for the Bon Marche, Western International Hotels, and Frederick and Nelson.

When HCC's journalism class began in 1962, she was offered the job as instructor. She accepted, and remained a teacher for 20 years. While Strehlau officially stepped down as advisor to the paper earlier this year, she has spent this quarter teaching other communications related classes.

She expressed her deep appreciation for the students of her classes and said they made her job much happier and easier.

"I'm very proud of the 20 years of students," Strehlau said. "I've been very fortunate in having a good staff over the years."

Strehlau added that "I have enjoyed, like the students, the support of the administration and the Board of Trustees, who have shared our pride in having an excellent paper and journalism program."

When teaching, Strehlau said she believes in a "hands-on" philosophy, where students can participate directly in operating a newspaper. She said that this gives the student much greater opportunity for learning than could be gained in a classroom.

Strehlau predicted that even though styles of news writing have changed slightly over the years, news will continue to be written in a traditional fashion.

"I think styles change with the trends of newspapers," she said, "but I think that the basic five W's will always be in style. Who, what, where, when, and why."

Strehlau has won several awards herself, including the National Council of College Publication Advisors award as "Distinguished Advisor" for community colleges, and the Torchbearer award, the highest honor given to a member of the Washington Press Association.

Following Strehlau's retirement, Julianne G. Crane was appointed program director for the Journalism/Mass Media program.

T-word celebrates two decades of publication

The Thunderword, Highline College's student newspaper, is celebrating its 20th year of publication. It has evolved over the years from a small mimeographed newsletter into an award-winning, nationally recognized college newspaper.

Started independently by former HCC student Sherry LaCombe in April 1962, the small amateur paper was originally printed on simple mimeographed sheets. Although LaCombe named the first issue The Mascot, the paper was retitled the Thunderword, a name chosen in a student contest, for the second and following issues. After several years, the hyphen was dropped and the title assumed its present nature.

In the fall of 1962, the Thunderword became the official school paper when a journalism class was begun on campus. The paper was quickly updated and revised as students entered the new program. Professionally printed pages, more photographs, and illustrations became the Thunderword's standardized format.

Betty Strehlau, HCC's first journalism advisor, recalled the early days of publication.

"There was such a crying need for it (the program) that everyone was anxious to get it started," she said.

As each new year began and a new group of students arrived, Strehlau said, they would use their own fresh ideas to improve and change the paper. Although the basic format has remained the same, minor production details, such as print style and number of columns of print on a page, have been altered over the years.

Strehlau remembered the dedication of the students in the early years, as the Thunderword gradually changed into its present form.

"We all shared the same goal," she recalled. "To produce the best paper possible."

Strehlau also mentioned that many students who have graduated from the program have gone on to successful careers in the field of journalism. She said that the HCC course provides excellent training in newspaper writing and production.

In the 1970's the Thunderword entered into national competition with other college papers. According to Strehlau, it has consistently won the highest honors from journalistic associations, including the prestigious Associated Collegiate Press Pacemaker award, won in 1977 and 1979.

Thanks to you it works...

Those crazy, lazy, hazy days of summer

Summer festivals attract all types of fanciers

Summer festivals offer inexpensive entertainment for people of all ages with a variety of interests. Washington has a wide range of fairs to choose from during the months of May, June, July August and September.

The Seattle Folklife Festival comes to the Seattle Center for its 11th year May 28-30. With 450 musicians, entertainers and dancers performing, 175 craftspeople, 38 ethnic food booths, 50 music, crafts and dance workshops, it is the nation's largest folk festival.

On Friday, 7-11 p.m. and Saturday through Monday, 11:30 a.m.-11 p.m., there will be a Northwest Regional Film Festival.

Also in its 11 year is the Pike Place Market Street Fair on the 30 and 31. It will take place from 10 a.m.-6 p.m. and will include 200 craft booths, ethnic food, gospel and ethnic music and entertainment.

June 18 marks the arrival of the three day Edmonds Art Festival in downtown Edmonds. Photos, 130 craft booths, a show of paintings, crafts and sculpture will be in Discovery Gallery Friday, noon-9 p.m.; Saturday, 10 a.m.-9 p.m. and Sunday, 10 a.m.-6 p.m.

One of the larger fairs, Fremont Fair, takes place June 19-20 in Seattle at N. 34th St. and First Ave. N.W. along the ship canal. On Saturday from 11 a.m.-6 p.m. and on Sunday from noon to 7 p.m. there will be 300 booths, entertainment and food.

On July 3-5, two festivals and a fair will take place. The "Choochokam" Langley Festival of the Arts on First St., Downtown Langley, will have 125 booths, a juried craft show, ethnic foods and local folk and rock bands. It will be held Friday through Sunday, 10 a.m.-6 p.m.

Also being held is the Heritage Festival in Marymoor Park, Redmond. During this, its eighth year, it will include 50 booths, ethnic and pioneer crafts, ethnic music, dance performed in traditional costumes, and ethnic food.

The final fair being held on July 3-5 is the Kingston Arts in the Park Fair in Kola-kole Park, Kingston. Folk music, an art show and 80 booths will be part of the festivities of this two year old festival.

On July 16-18, the Kent Cornucopia Days will be held in Downtown Kent. There will be arts and crafts, music, entertainment and a parade on Sunday. Kent Parks and Recreation has more information.

King County's oldest and most established fair, the Pacific Northwest Arts and Crafts fair, will be opening for its 36th year on July 23-25. It has 240 booths, 500 entries in visual arts show, food and entertainment.

Then, to top off the summer festivities, the Bumbershoot Festival comes to Seattle Center September 4-6. In addition to the usual yearly attractions, there are 50 select craft booths, all in the open air.

If you can't grow it...

U-Pick produces savings

by Theresa Jones

Local Pea Patches and U-Pick produce will be summer fare for people looking to save on a food budget.

King County Pea Patches have been open since April 3. The lot size is 400 sq. ft. and the rental price is $25. The lots have already been assigned, but a few lots are still available. To inquire about late registration call 344-3982 and an application will be mailed.

The local Pea Patches found in some cities, such as Kent, are still available. The lot size for Pea Patches is 10 ft. by 40 ft. The rental price is $25. To register for late planting, contact the Kent Court House on Fourth Avenue in Kent. The office is located on the second floor and is open Monday through Friday 8 am to 5 pm.

The U-Pick farms in King and Pierce Counties offer fresh fruit such as raspberries, strawberries, and blueberries. Produce from vegetable U-Picks range from beans, cucumbers and beets to carrots, corn, cauliflower, melons and zucchini.

Compared to the same produce found in local chain stores, the fresh fruit and vegetable farms are a lighter touch on the consumers tight food budget.

A consumer can expect to pay approximately 90 cents to $1 for a ¼ pound of fresh produce. The average price for produce from a farm or U-Pick was 75 cents per pound last year. Produce prices for 1982 will depend largely on the incoming crops, but the prices are not expected to rise dramatically.

"All the farmers try to keep their prices about the same," said Sylvia Fernando from D & D Farm in Kent.

A Carpinito Brothers Farm Stand employee stated, "since a lot of the produce is not ready yet, a lot comes from out of state, so right now it's more expensive."

From the farms that were contacted, most agreed that the biggest turnout is for the raspberries and strawberries to make into jams and jellies.

"It's alot easier to start canning with jam," Fernando explained, "canning of fruit and vegetables can be expensive at first because of the cost of the jars, but it saves in the long run."

For those who seek a different type of U-Pick there is a trout farm located in Kent. Cran-Mar Trout Farm has a U-Catch rainbow and gold trout all year long. The trout is grown right on the farm so "there is plenty for everyone."

To find the location of a farm stand or U-Pick the Puget Sound Farm Market Association has published a farm guide which is available free at all local libraries.

Another way to save is to buy directly from the farm. Animal and dairy products, herbs and spices, cider and honey are just a few examples of the type of products available.

Campers pack cares away

by Christine Valdez

The search for an inexpensive relaxing way to get out of the routine brings 60 million people a year to the camping grounds annually.

They carry with them tents, sleeping bags, stoves, lanterns, mattresses, cooler chests and water carriers; the essentials for tent camping. Those who have learned from experience have also compiled other hints.

Frequent campers should consider keeping duplicate kitchen utensils such as pots, pans, spatulas, knives and bottle openers so they won't have to raid their kitchen every time they go camping.

A checklist of basic supplies such as matches and charcoal lighter helps save time, so does planning meals in advance so ingredients are on hand.

Other necessities that people often neglect to include are plastic bags, a duffel bag, toilet tissue and an old rug to put down in the doorway of the tent.

There are also assorted tips for packing food. Freeze-dried and convenience foods cut down on cooking time.

For even more convenience, many people recommend packing frozen meat and breaking eggs into sealed containers so they'll be ready for cooking.

Washington has a large number of state parks where campers can try out their new tips.

- Saltwater State Park, located five miles West of Kent, has swimming, fishing, hiking trails and an underwater park for divers.

- Dash Point State Park, located five miles Northeast of Tacoma, has swimming, fishing, clamming, scuba diving and hiking trails.

- Beacon Rock State Park, six and a half miles southwest of North Bonneville, has a playground, boat launch, swimming, fishing, hiking and equestrian trails.

- Bay View State Park, seven miles west of Mt. Vernon, swimming, fishing, clamming, scuba diving, hiking trails.

- Larrabee State Park, seven miles south of Bellingham, has swimming, fishing, clamming, scuba diving and hiking trails.

- Spirit Lake, 46 miles east of Castle Rock, offers boat rental, water-skiing, swimming, fishing and nature trails.

Powerful netters take high hopes to state

by Karen Belongia

The women's tennis team is currently keeping their serves high and smashing the ball over the net in the state tennis tournament, which is taking place in Walla Walla today and tomorrow.

At the regional tournament last weekend, everyone qualified for state by finishing in the top three of their division. Even though the top three finishers advance, those who placed third will have to go through preliminaries before they are seeded in state.

"The girls have done very well all season," Coach Mary Schutten-Cattell said. "I'm proud of each of them and we're looking forward to state."

In the singles matches, Andie Field took third place. She lost to Heidi Jordan, 6-7, 4-6, but won her match against Marilyn Clements, 6-2, 6-4. Julie Preiser captured first place honors by defeating Linda Watkins, 6-1, 6-4, and Jill Hallberg 6-3, 3-6, 6-1.

Seeded fourth in number-three singles in regionals, Debbi Medin came back to place second by clipping Darlene Mjoen, 7-5, 6-4. Medin lost to Elisa Valdez, 7-5, 3-6, 1-6, in the championships.

Lisa Livermore captured first place by smashing Sue Garred, 6-4, 6-3, and DeAnne Griffith, 6-3, 6-4. Number-five singles player Kathy Ruston also took first place, winning her matches against Carrie Lee, 6-1, 7-5, and Tami Bilddt, 6-3, 3-6, 6-4.

Linda Swain was edged by Debbie Hendrich, 4-6, 7-5, 4-6, but came back to finish third by defeating Nancy Egbers, 6-3, 4-6, 6-2.

The number-one doubles team of Field and Preiser finished first by topping the team of Karen Jones and Mjoen, 6-2, 6-2, and Jill Hallberg and Mary Reading, 6-0, 6-3. Medin and Swain were victorious in their first match against Watkins and Pam Waechter, 6-1, 6-0, but lost their second match against Reading and Bilddt, 3-6, 2-6, to take second place.

In number-three doubles, Livermore and Ruston finished in first place by defeating Lee and Sharon Tjersland, 6-2, 6-3, and Valdez and Garred 7-5, 2-6, 6-3.

In their last league match of the 1982 season, the netters defeated Skagit Valley by the score of 8-1.

The 1982 women's tennis team consists of, (back row, left to right), Debbi Medin, Debbi Boyd, Linda Swain, Kathy Ruston, and Coach Mary Schutten-Cattell. Top row, left to right, includes Lisa Livermore, Heidi Jacobson, Julie Preiser, Mary Lowndes, and Andie Field.

After shooting baskets for Highline's state champion women's basketball team, sophomore Linda Swain is now smashing the ball over the net as a member of the women's tennis team.

A 1980 graduate of Tyee High School, Swain is an all-around athlete.

At Tyee, Swain lettered three years in basketball and two years in softball. She was also chosen to help represent Tyee in the annual Highline District Superstars competition, which features top athletes from the District's four high schools.

At Highline, Swain has played basketball for two years and is in her second season on the tennis team.

Swain is co-captain, along with freshman Debbi Medin, and plays number-six singles and teams up with Medin in number-two doubles.

"Linda had had somewhat of a frustrating season in doubles. But her and Debbie have a lot of determination to try the best that they can possible be and now they're working well together," Women's Tennis Coach Mary Schutten-Cattell said. "She's a real pleasure to have on the team."

At the regional tournament last weekend, Linda finished third in number-six singles and along with Medin, they placed second in number-two doubles. The tennis team is currently in Walla Walla for the state tournament, which will continue through tomorrow.

Last year, Swain and partner Debbie Boyd placed fourth in number-three doubles in the state tennis tournament.

According to Swain, tennis is a lot of fun and she especially enjoys the competition. Swain also said that Schutten-Cattell is easy to relate to, which helps make tennis fun.

"Mary's a good coach," Swain said. "She has had a lot of experience so she knows what she's talking about."

Western Washington University is the next destination on Swain's educational itinerary. After she receives her Associate of Arts degree this year, Swain plans to transfer to WWU where she will major in business.

"I might go for an accounting degree, too," she added.

As for continuing her sports career, Swain said that she might try out for WWU's women's basketball team.

"I heard that they (WWU) have a good program up there," she said. "I don't know about their tennis program so I'll have to check it out when I get there."

Council uses small dogs to censor media

by Red Barbasol

There was no joy in Midway May 16 when the HCSU Council softball team relied on ringers and small dogs to defeat a leaderless Thunderword team 30-9. The score, however, does not tell the full story.

The T-Words were at an immediate disadvantage when their spiritual leader and editor-in-chief R.W. "Babe" Davolt failed to show. The demoralized scribes pulled together though, to field a deceptively powerful team.

The first inning got underway quietly as the T-word bats were rendered useless by the mediocre pitching of Rose "Dizzy" Mattich. But the council members wasted no time reaching into their bag of tricks when they took their turn at bat.

In front of a crowd of two spectators and an infant, the council released a wild animal on the field. This veteran reporter nearly jumped out of his Sunday morning skin when the furry creature lit across the field. Fearing flashbacks from an earlier hobby, more careful examination revealed that the creature was merely a dog. Nonetheless, the Free Press was knocked off balance.

Council members took advantage of the tilt to rally for two runs.

"It was that darned dog," lamented T-word infielder

R.A. "Babe" Smart. "The dog and the sun was really bright, ya know, I couldn't see a thing."

As the game wore on, the T-word staffers were totally dazzled by the play of the ringers brought in by the council. This crusty reporter personally recognized the one called "Jenine McEdwards" as Frannie "Fran" Zar-buck, the Eastern Pacific Front batting champion.

The player called "Kodi" looked suspiciously like Abdul Aaronhaf, the renowned Middle Eastern cricket bowler. Aaronhaf, you may recall, once said he would play "anywhere for anyone" if the price was right. Almost enough to make this greasy old reporter lose his objectivity.

The council kept pounding out the hits and it wasn't until the fourth inning that the T-words scored their first run on a wallowing home run by Jeff "Babe" Johnson. The council however, responded with five more runs of their own.

The T-words really came to life in the seventh when Jeff "Babe" Keenan led off the inning with an awesome line drive over second base for a single. Keenan made it all the way around the horn and then, with the bases loaded, Jeff "Babe" Andrews sent the doctored ball far into right field for a grand slam. The T-Words were able to score once more before retiring.

But the media couldn't hold on when the steroid-laden council members approached the plate. T-word hurler Christine "Babe" Valdez gave up an obscene amount of hits to Mighty Joe Elston, Tom "Terrific" Jackson and their heavily paid team.

Most of the council members batted twice that inning. This can be attributed to a freak series of solar flares that occurred while the scribes were on the field. Second baseman Kennan, however was not so quick to blame the sun.

"No, man, it wasn't the sun. Golly, I'm from Chicago, I'm used to that. It was this big hole in my glove, see, I couldn't hang on to anything. The hole and that dog, man, that's what did it."

The council hits kept coming. Council pitcher Mattich took advantage of her base running to illegally pinch the T-word infielders.

Ron "Babe" Del Mar, playing left field, immediately demanded a shift to first base. The upsetting tactics of the council were clearly effective as the confused and indignant Fourth Estate went down by 21 runs.

All in all the game was one of the bigger travesties this often drunk reporter has ever witnessed. Furthermore, in light of the council's basketball victory over the scribes winter Quarter, this pathetic old coger feels that an immediate investigation into the personal lives and habits of each and every council member and their families is more certainly in order. Generic beer, indeed.

Work published; family roots in 'Life Writing'

Bill Hofmann takes a break to reflect on Life Writing.

by Kevin Kerr

Bill Hofmann wants to tell you how to remember "the good ol' days" with his book Life Writing.

The book is about writing family histories and is being published by St. Martin's Press. It will be available nationally "any day now" says Hofmann.

"The book sprung from some writing classes I was teaching at several of the Des Moines retirement homes," he said. "I found there was a wide variety of experience and human history among the residents, and I tried compiling their accounts into an anthology."

"When I had my agent present the idea to several publishers, they were rather reluctant because 'yes they were nice stories, but no one reads about what old people do anymore.' So my agent suggested that I write a book about how to compile family histories and then try to publish the samples."

Life Writing was the result, and it proves to be a very useful text. It received a positive review in Library Journal from William Donovan of the Chicago Public Library.

"Hofmann presents basic, practical techniques that heritage-minded family members can use to assemble memories of past years into book form... This concise, quality book by an experienced writer is definitely recommended."

The author himself said the project was very enjoyable. "St. Martin's switched editors about half way through, but even so, there was very little rewrite. The new editor, Bob Miller, only suggested that I leave out a few samples, and that's what we went with."

The text contains several examples from Hofmann's own family history, "seemingly minor things that should be preserved and remembered. The emphasis of the whole book is to record memories in the oral tradition, as if taken from a journal or diary. The recollections don't have to be extremely technical or statistically accurate, just the routine of daily living, the most human events."

Life Writing is Hofmann's first nationally published work, although he has had several pieces appear locally, including features in the Sunday sections of both the Seattle Times and PI. He also collaborated with HCC instructor Lonny Kaneko in writing an experimental textbook called Media 5 which was used in a trial class setting at Highline in 1972-73.

Summer arts flourish

More information including ticket prices can be acquired by contacting the box office.

Pacific Lively Arts has two plays on its summer stock agenda. Theaters of high school age or first year college will be given a chance to act in Brigadoon.

"Summer stock gives beginning actors and actresses a chance to get some stage experience," said PLA spokesman Mike Kaiser.

Junior summer stock starts June 21 and will be held in the Sunnydale Elementary School gymnasium. "Anyone can be in the show," according to Kaiser.

This is Pacific Lively Arts eighteenth season, said Kaiser. "We're expecting about 60 students from all over King County."

The theatre is located in the Highline High School auditorium. Admission is $5 for adults and $3 for students and senior citizens.

Centerstage in Federal Way will put on the play Gi-Gi from May 20 the June 12.

Centerstage is also offering summer acting classes for all ages. Classes begin June 7.

For a unique treat get outdoors to the Forest Theatre near Bremerton. The Mountaineer Players will be performing Around the World in Eighty Days. The Mountaineer Players have been presenting plays and musicals at the Forest Theatre, a picturesque outdoor amphitheatre, since 1923. The presentation of "Around the World in Eighty Days" starts at 2 p.m. on May 30, 31, June 5, 6, and June 12, 13.

Admission is $4 for adults and $2 for children.

For more information contact the Mountaineers, Fidelity Lane ticket outlets or the Holiday Inn in Bremerton.

Seattle Yacht Club members pass in review along the Montlake Cut.

Seattle reasserted its title as yachting capital of the nation this year as a vast armada moved out into Lake Washington during opening day festivities.

A cannon boomed to start the parade, which was held up for a time by a crew regatta.

Yachts, both sail and power, paraded down Montlake Cut to Lake Washington while a crowd of 75,000 watched from the shore or from boats moored along the log booms in Portage Bay.

This year's theme, "Ports of the Pacific", helped add a festive atmosphere as many boats and crews were dressed up in various colorful costumes.

About 260 boats were registered for the parade. The winner of the Seattle Yacht Club's sweepstakes trophy for the parade was the boat "Voyager" of the Meydenbauer Yacht Club.

SeaTac:

gateway to Washington

X-Ray machines aren't limited to Doctors offices anymore. Airports around the world use them to check passengers for concealed weapons.

Throughout the day classes at Highline College are interrupted by the roar of jumbo jets going to and from Seattle-Tacoma International Airport.

The smile on this little girl's face reveals the arrival of a loved one, rather than departure.

Sea Tac serves as a gateway to the Emerald City for travelers from around the world.

Inside the airport the emotions begin to flow. The emotions aren't so obvious on the faces of the well traveled businessman though.

They come in at all sizes at SeaTac, from the 747 jets to this twin engine charter plane.

Airplanes aren't restricted to transporting people. These freight cars carry anything from pets to parcel or luggage to souvenirs.

Sadness is present at the boarding gate, and the tears show just how hard it is to say good-bye.

Smiles light up the terminal as a long missed face emerges through the arrival gate.

Several passengers get ready to leave Western Washington's gateway as they board on flight 12 to Minneapolis.

As boarding time nears the last minute rush for seats begins.

Maharlika

The Fashion Merchandising Department at Highline Community College presents Maharlika, a fashion show with whispers of tropical influence. The fashion show will be held in Building 8 on Highline's campus at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, June 9, 1982. Tickets, which include a Polynesian style dinner, will be sold in advance for $10.75 and can be obtained only through students majoring in Fashion Merchandising. Maharlika is a Polynesian word meaning "royalty."

Jazz it up in the hot fun summertime

by Denise Chanez
and Doug Sippy

Summertime means different things in different places. But here in the Puget Sound it means an end to nine months of aquatic fallout. As people begin to enjoy the great outdoors again they take the opportunity to bring their music and art with them.

Hence, Seattle overflows with outdoor entertainment. There is something for everyone every weekend. Plays, music and art are all celebrated with a passion only the waterlogged Seattleite would comprehend.

The following is only a partial list of the many happenings going down this summer. But there should be enough here to get everyone started on a fine, fine summer.

Music

Music is everywhere. Tunes are blaring out from car stereos, transistors and from favorite night spots. This summer seems to be filled with listener's entertainment galore.

One place you might want to check out this summer is the Seattle Center. Starting June 22, KZOK and Seattle Center will co-sponsor Saturday music in the park. Every Saturday, except July 24, at 1:00, top local bands will play at the center.

No Cheese Please, Shyanne and The Cowboys might be some of the bands you'll get a chance to listen to for free.

One the concert level, Rail will play at the Eagles Ballroom on May 21.

Jean Luc Ponty, electric jazz violinist formerly from the Frank Zappa Band, The Mothers of Invention, will perform on May 28, at the Moore Theater.

The Showbox Theater will host new wave bands, Waitress and Moving Parts on May 4.

Going for the biggies we have Cheap Trick at the Paramount Theater on May 8 and Ozzie Osbourne in the same place on May 15.

At a local level, Kent beats most of the surrounding areas for summer music. Starting July 19, music will ring out at 7:30 from Downtown Kent. A hot time in the old town can be found for six consecutive Monday nights at the Kent Library.

The first Monday will feature contemporary jazz from the Joe Zamberlin Trio. A week later brings a blue grass band, the Nashville Rebels.

Jazz comes back on the 9th of August with Les Begal performing some Dixieland jazz. On the 16th we'll get a taste of some traditional jazz by Sol and Protas. The ending Monday brings a harp soloist to the library.

All that jazz

Jazz, the root of most modern music, is reawakening the minds of today's music listeners.

Jazz concerts seem to be the sizzlers this summer. Top on this summer's agenda is Bellevue Community College. This two day, 24 band, free concert is scheduled to be held on July 17 and 18.

Headlining artists for the festive weekend will include Ernestine Anderson, jazz singer, backed by the Barney McClure Trio; Slim Gaillard, singer-songwriter; Bill Smith, clarinetist, backed by Tom Collier and Dan Dean; and many more.

Moving along towards the end of the month brings us into the Kool Jazz Festival co-sponsored by KJZZ and the Seattle Symphony Orchestra, produced by Festival Productions.

This eight day jam is a must for all jazzophiles. Some of the top artists in jazz will be performing throughout Seattle during the August 6 festival.

Kicking off the celebration is the long awaited return of Miles Davis. Davis, featured with the Jeff Lorber Fusion will be playing July 31, at the Seattle Center Arena.

On August 1, Seattle hosts The Great Quartet: McCoy Tyner, Tony Williams, Ron Carter and Freddie Hubbard along with nine other bands at Marymoor Park.

Ella Fitzgerald and Oscar Peterson prove some things just improve with age. Both will be performing at the Paramount Theatre on August 2.

There are two free concerts scheduled for this week, Dee Daniels at Freeway Park on August 2, at noon and at noon on August 4 at the Sea-First Plaza featuring The Great Excelsior Jazz Band.

Summertime means cool jazz on hot days at the BCC Jazz Festival. Music for all tastes abounds during the dog days as well as fairs, festivals and live theatre.

For more information on the week's schedule, contact the Seattle Symphony Orchestra.

Theatre

The world of live entertainment has much to offer for theatre buffs (even if it's just a stage your going through.)

The Fifth Avenue Theatre in Seattle should provide a charming atmosphere for the award winning Annie starring Kristi Coombs. The show opens on June 10 and will run until July 11.

Next Carol Channing stars in Hello Dolly from July 14 to August 8.

Rocky III takes a dive, no knockout

by Christine Valdez

Once again it has been proven that a sequel to a good movie is only as good as its original idea. This time it took Sylvester Stallone who wrote, directed and starred, and his second sequel to Rocky, Rocky III, to prove it.

To many people, just the title is enough to either stir feelings of curiosity or turn the viewer away completely. The ones who are turned away are probably the ones who've experienced movies such as "Jaws II", "Superman II", "Exorcist II" or any one of the other bad sequels on the long list that have recently been made.

It might have been more effective if the movie had been at least subtitled "Eye of the Tiger," the name of the theme song and a simile used to illustrate the look in a good fighter's eyes.

The continuation picks up where "Rocky II" left off, although it does not follow as closely as "Rocky II" followed "Rocky I".

A series of short interspersed segments in the beginning were effective in showing Rocky's progression up to now and introduces Rocky's new competition, Clubber Lang.

However, the segment progresses so quickly that it becomes hard for the viewer to follow the time frame, making it seem as if not much time had passed when in actuality a number of years needed to have gone by.

Throughout the Rocky series there has been a feeling that good guys finish first in the end. However, Stallone seems to have tried to offset a feeling of predictability by changing who the "good" and "bad" guys are.

In the first two movies, Apollo Creed, played by Carl Weathers was Rocky's major obstacle and took the role of the "villain."

Things have changed since Apollo retired and his role has been taken over by Clubber Lang, a menacing looking contender played by a huge mohawked ex-bouncer known only as Mr. T.

Sylvester Stallone stars as Rocky Balboa in MGM/Universal's release, Rocky III.

Clubber Lang seems to relish the part of fighting Rocky as he takes every available opportunity to insult and challenge him.

When Lang also insults Creed it is only obvious, maybe even too simple-minded, who the good guy behind Rocky is going to be. So, okay kids, who would have at one time been glad to see Lang make hamburger of Rocky's face but now will be training him? Right, who else but Apollo Creed.

About this time Stallone introduces an excellent simile comparing the hungry look in a fighter's eyes when he really wants to win, to the eye of a tiger.

However, not much is done with this good idea. It serves to get Rocky fired up but it isn't followed up very well. A lot of potential was lost when Stallone neglected to develop this simile more.

By this time, Rocky is rich, very rich. The film does a good job of showing how wealth has changed Rocky's attitude. Gone are the dirty undershirts and old tennis shoes. They've been replaced by tailored three piece suits and designer sweats.

Along with this change comes a change in attitude. Rocky no longer has the eye of the tiger by the time he fights Lang.

He suffers from his usual motivational problem. Who's he going to do it for this time? He's just about run out of options when in steps Adrian to give her inspirational speech and another option. How about if he did it for himself? Rocky likes the idea, trains harder because of it and is on his way to another title fight.

Stallone has a serious problem with developing his characters. He doesn't. He depends too much on the fact that the audience has probably already seen the two previous movies. The characters, therefore, lack any depth.

Talia Shire, Adrian, is used more as a prop than as the talented actress she proved herself to be in "Rocky". Her role is limited to being present at Rocky's training sessions, modeling her new wardrobe and being an occasional source of inspiration.

As a whole, the movie is like a maze the viewer is following. It keeps from becoming predictable by utilizing a number of twists and turns. Some are interesting but some of the twists serve only to confuse the viewer.

However, although a lot of raw excitement has been lost with the smoothing of some of Rocky's raw edges, most of the electric excitement can still be felt at the end.

Should the rumors be true and Stallone decide to once again resurrect this almost dead story, he should consider a number of renovations.

Although "Rocky III" can't be erased, maybe if he gives "Rocky IV" a title instead of a number, and brings back some of the original Rocky, maybe than the bad memories won't be so keen.

Griffith, Slater capture state titles

Though there was little chance for the Highline tracksters to compete for the team championship at the Washington State Athletic Association of Community Colleges last weekend at Spokane Falls, several outstanding individual performances were displayed nonetheless.

The men finished fifth, with 58 points. As was expected by Coach Chuck Czubin, Spokane Falls took first place with 169 points, followed by Bellevue's 134, Tacoma's 76, and Everett's 60.

We were disappointed but they (the team) did the best that they could do. Quite a few of them achieved personal bests," Czubin said.

"Spokane Falls had some injuries which helped Tacoma and Everett, but it didn't help us. As a result, Tacoma received six extra points and Everett got eight."

Brian Slater successfully defended his state shot put title by heaving the steel ball 51'7 3/4". Slater also took first place in the discus, with a toss of 158'.

"He was a good eight feet ahead of the second place finisher (in the discus)," Czubin said.

Janet Griffith lapped the field in the 10,000 meter run and finished first with a conference-record time of 38:10.

"She lapped some of them three times," Czubin said. "Even though I wished that there could have been a stronger competition, I'm still pleased with her performance."

Griffith also took a fourth-place finish in the 5,000 meters with a time of 18:05.

Pole-vaulter Tom Jackson had a repeat performance as that of a year ago. He leaped 13'6" for a second place, which is the same height he cleared for second place last year.

The mile-relay team of Randy Bergquist, Tom Love, Willie Taylor, and Brent Wiekler ran their fastest time of the season, 3:20.46, for second place. They were clipped by Tacoma, who was clocked at 3:20.1.

"They (HCC) improved their time by about 1.5 seconds," Czubin said.

According to Czubin, the sprint, or 400-meter, relay team didn't perform well.

Jon Hanson finished third in the 5,000-meter run, with a time of 15:32.5. He took fourth place in the 10,000 meters, as well.

Czubin said he's real proud of the team's performance and wished that they could have placed higher after all the effort they put into their events.

Wiekler jumped 23'2 3/4" in the long jump to take fourth. He finished fifth in the triple jump with a hop, skip, and a jump of 45'5 3/4".

In the 5,000 and 10,000 meters, Kevin Syrtad finished sixth and fifth respectively. Todd Henry ran to a sixth-place finish in the 1,500-meter run.

Kevin Rutledge placed fifth in the steeple chase, while Mike Carver leaped 21'11 1/4" in the long jump, which was good enough for eighth place.

"Mike came in with the 12th longest jump and improved to finish eighth," Czubin said.

According to Czubin, Michelle Denniston had a tough meet and didn't make the finals in the 3,000 and 5,000 meters.

Placing sixth in the long jump was Gail Stoll, who jumped 16'5 3/4". Czubin said that she jumped her best mark for the season, improving by two-and-a-half inches.

Next year there won't be a women's track team, according to Czubin. Though the women weren't officially a team this year, they were able to work out and compete in the meets. Next year, the outlook is uncertain.

"We might be able to do the same thing as we have done this year, but I don't know yet," he said.

As for the men's team, Czubin said that he is looking forward to next year.

Racquetters finish season disappointed

by Leslie Exley

Highline Community College's men's tennis team completed their 1982 season with a fifth-place finish in the state tennis tournament, which was held in Yakima.

The T-bird racquetters compiled a final league record of 8-5, finishing third in Region I. They had an overall record of 9-5.

Although the racquetters were not expected to place very high in the state tournament, they thought it was possible.

"We beat the teams that we were 'supposed' to beat, but we lost a few close ones," Coach David Johnson said. "We could have finished third."

In number-one singles, Roy Merca lost to John Click of Clark Community College in the second round by the score of 6-1, 1-6, 2-6.

"Everybody played good, but we (team) could have done better," Merca commented. "The second and third days of the tournament were tough."

John Tate took fourth place in number-two singles, falling in the third round to Clark's John Heim in a tight match, 6-7, 4-6. The first set went into overtime.

Also taking fourth place for the racquetters was Greg Scott. He was stopped in the third round by Columbia Basin Community College's Kim Carter in three sets.

"We didn't want it (championship) bad enough," Scott said. "We weren't aggressive enough."

Dave DuPuy lost his match in the third round to Carolus of Spokane Falls Community College, 4-6, 1-6, finishing in fourth place.

Smashing his way to a third-place finish was Mark Pallet. He placed the highest individually for the T-birds by defeating Clark's Rod Morash, 6-3, 6-1.

Pallet said that he wasn't totally satisfied with his playing.

"I lost in the third set in a tiebreaker. I could have won it (tiebreaker) with only two points," he said.

Although the team made the best of their losses, Pallet said that he wished that they had ended up on the other side (placing in the top three).

In number-one doubles, Merca and Scott took fourth, losing to Columbia Basin's Thomas and Bampton, 2-6, 2-6. Tate and DuPuy were also stopped by Columbia Basin, losing to Carter and Mechem.

Even though the tournament was somewhat disappointing, the players said that they had fun.

"They may have had too much fun," Johnson said. "If they would have been mean and ornery, they might have done better."

Hoopsters Sampson, Valentine to shoot baskets out of state

by Roger Haight

Graduation and moving on brings changes for everyone, but it involves traveling long distances for two Highline basketball players who are graduating next month.

Jeff Valentine and Jerome Sampson will go out of state in opposite directions, to attend school and play basketball next fall.

Valentine has signed a letter of intent to play at the University of Alaska in Fairbanks. Sampson is headed for Concordia College in Portland, Oregon.

Sampson said that Concordia was the main school that showed an interest in him. This summer, he hopes to stay in shape by playing in a summer basketball league at Bellevue Community College, and possibly work at Lenny Wilkens' summer basketball camp.

"I really enjoyed this past season, and I feel like I've improved some over my two seasons here," Sampson said.

Valentine echoed Sampson's sentiments about playing at HCC.

"I had fun all season, but it wasn't just because we were winning. Everyone on the team was great to work with," Valentine said.

Valentine said that the U of Alaska was the only school that interested him among the schools that wanted him to play for them.

"I talked to the coach at Alaska and was pretty impressed with him," he said. "I never really considered the other schools (which were local)."

The 6'6", 210 pound forward plans to spend his summer working out in Eastern Washington before moving up to Fairbanks.

Ironically, the two former T-birds will square off against each other next season with their new schools. Both Concordia and the U of Alaska are in the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics, Division II, and Sampson said that the Concordia coach told him the two teams will meet next year.

Several other players from both the men's and women's basketball teams may be playing basketball at other schools next year, although some haven't decided where to go.

Reese Radliff will probably attend Central Washington University. Ross Beard may walk on at Western Washington University, according to Highline Coach Fred Harrison.

On the women's team, most of the graduating ballplayers have yet to decide where to play, according to Coach Dale Bolinger. The exception is Linda Swain, who is going to WWU in the fall.
