Interim system corrects library privacy violation

by DUNCAN MCDONALD

Following a recommendation last spring from administration and students, an interim system of book checkout in the library was implemented last summer and formally presented at the last Board of Trustees meeting on Sept. 13.

The call for a new system came when it was determined that the old system was in violation of state public disclosure laws which limit access to personal information including addresses, social security numbers and phone numbers. The previous system required students to fill out a card with some information that card would remain in the book the entire time, leaving it possible for any student to acquire the enclosed card.

The new cards are in the form of decals which require the same information, but are taken out of the book upon return. As expected, the task of removing the old cards and setting up for our new ones involved a great deal of manual labor. Hence, other jobs were made necessary in the summer months had to be ignored.

"We divided all of our energy to see that this job was completed," said Rudy Griffin, Library Supervisor. "This obviously meant that other tasks were put on the back burner."

In all, a test of approximately 60,000 books were removed from the shelves in a six-week period between July 1 and August 15. Griffin stated that figures on the total cost of the undertaking were unavailable.

To aid in the completion of the project, the library hired members of the King County Work Training Students program. "They were told the bulk of the typing, and assisted the library technicians in removal of the cards," said Griffin. "I was happy with their work.

When asked about whether the overall project went, Griffin stated, "It was a huge success, but I think that the system will work; I feel very positive about it.

Highline Library's Violation of Public Disclosure Laws

"We want to make sure that if a system like that would encompass more than just check-out capabilities," he said. "Further planning will be needed."

Neal Allen, former HCSU Executive Council Chairman, who last spring formally brought up the problem in the Board of Trustees, while he said, "that long term solution of a computerized system might have some less expensive than the one implemented."

"We were looking for a permanent solution to the problem," said Allen. "We will continue working with the new library director, in hopes of finding an ultimate system. The money used to apply and maintain the interim system should have been used for a final solution, but we are excited about what we've accomplished."

Ginny Hansen, also a council member appointed expressed the same thoughts. "It's a big improvement, but we were hoping for an ultimate solution."

S & A Board faces major budget decision

by JONATHAN DOOR

The Service and Activities board is faced with a financial decision that could impact some college activities and programs.

Because the S & A had a deficit of $9,518 in the 1983-84 academic year, the budget committee must now decide how to manage the deficit to affect the coming year's budget.

At the end of the 1983-84 year, there were two categories of old spending: library and the fund balance which was shown or authorized for the field, but was not been spent yet.

These charges were then sent into the 1984-85 budget, but the money to cover them was not immediately moved into the fund balance. The fund balance is a reserve account credited from excess revenue from previous years. The 1983-84 unused money was put into this reserve as of the end of the budget year, June 30, raising the fund balance from $17,000 to $18,500. So even though the budget ended as a deficit, the reserve grew.

Now the budget committee must decide whether or not to take money from the fund balance and transfer it into the 1984-85 budget to cover the encumbrances created on the 1983-84 budget to dissolve fund balances in their current budget with no additional funds.

According to Mackintosh, "Right now we are not looking at the $3,100 deficit as a major problem, primarily because we have a large fund balance reserve at $18,000. When happened was that not all the money had been spent at the end of the budget period. There had been money are aside the encumbrances waiting for all of the bills to come in and then it would have been spent."

But Mackintosh added, "This year we have some potential problems. The normal procedure would be to take the money out of the reserve and move it over to this year's budget. This may be in fact what will happen again. The problems are that this year's budget was budgeted at a $19,000 deficit, meaning that the request amount was $19,000 less than what we expect to spend."

According to former Executive Council Vice Chairman Al Roos, this deficit resulted from funding a new wrestling program, increased budget requests from existing student organizations, and less revenue as a result of decreased enrollments. "It & A monies come from a fee paid by students when they register."

Mackintosh added, "We had a $17,000 shortfall in expected revenue this year, the major problem in our $4,000 deficit. I was surprised to learn that the money was not forwarded along with the budget."

This deficit budget request was approved by the President of Highline College, Dr. Shirley Goodwin, and the Board of Trustees, based on the condition that it be a one time only occurrence.

Another condition for the acceptance of the budget was that a study be conducted this year to establish some funding priorities. As a result of the study the S & A budget has to cut $8,000. Then Mackintosh stated "It isn't fair for our S & A budget members to have to pay with the reserve, if fund balance, monies to do this. Mackintosh added that if they began to dig deeper into reserve funds, it gives them less money to expand the building.

"It isn't fair for our S & A budget members to have to pay with the reserve budget for last year's expenditures when they thought they had spent the money already, especially when they had plans on the expansion of building B. They may decide to go ahead and spend the money out of our reserve budget and just bite the bullet. It is hard to say what the council will do.

The S & A budget committee is composed of four students from student government Neal Allen, David Lee, Al Roos, and Ginny Hansen. There are also two faculty members. Ed Morris, see S & A page 3.

Expansion of parking gives students space

by JUNCAN MCDONALD

Parking has never been a bright spot in most student days at Highline, but with the expansion over the summer of the south lot, it may be a bit easier now.

Approximately 112 spots were created by the construction that officially began June 15 and was remotely completed on Sept. 15. Now, some non-vehicle still remain on the lot, but Director of Facilities and Operations Phil Sell was very pleased with the way the contract handled the major undertaking.

"They (the contractors) started the job, didn't stop until it was very nearly completed," said Sell. "Uninterrupted construction doesn't always happen, so I am happy with the way it turned out."

The total amount of student parking spots now stands at 1,363, including the spaces provided by the Midway Drive-In. Since the expanded portion of the lot was in a primarily student area, faculty parking still remains off the lot, but Director of Campus Security Chief Jack Chapman.

The cost of this project was a seemingly high $140,000, but as Sell explained, that included the induction of some long needed paved walkways around the campus, and a small park shop.

"The money also went to the making of some paved walkways throughout the campus, including the Performing Arts Center, and a driveway leading from the front of the Student Center to the entrance of the Artist Lecture Hall. That will give anybody performing there, particularly musicians, a place to bring equipment more easily to the building. Various other spots were provided with walkways," Sell explained.

The money for the project was provided by the Parking Lot Fund, in existence since Highline's opening in 1961. The fund comes from parking lots become cumulated since that time, but a portion was needed every year for maintenance. The lot "includes paving of the space lines and repainting of curbs," Sell noted.

"The biggest benefit of the project was the installation of new entrances for the south lot, located east and west of the original entrance," explained Sell. "Cars were jamming in and coming out at the same place, and that was dangerous. Now there are two entrances, and the exit is located where the first pathway was."

"This also noted that the east entrance will be a help to the intra bus drivers, who have had a difficult time navigat-

"Many people don't know about the parking over here," said Sell. "I think it's easier to walk from Midway, than from the south or north lots, which both have awful paths to the campus."

The spokesperson from Chapman's office noted that the lot is the same for parking in the driving as it is for the lots on campus. Parking permits are available at the Campus Security office in High Highline has passed up the chance to become a city, as was evident in the election results of the primary election held September 19.

If the law had passed, the unincorporated area of King County would have become the newest and fourth largest city in the state.

The people who have participated in the vote have included Burien, White Center and North Highline. The National International Airport, having roughly the same boundaries as the Highline School District, has been the center of square miles and had a population of nearly 68 thousand.

Last week, for the first time in four years, high-ranking Soviet and U.S. officials met in an attempt to bridge the ever widening gap between the two superpowers. Although it is understandable that both candidates would like to collect the political bonanzas points at this stage of our campaigns, these superpower talks should not be seen as an attempt of "can you top this," Mondale stated an appointment with Gromyko. And when Mondale met with the Democratic party chairman on the eve of his first trip abroad, the officials met in an attempt to bridge the gap, questions of morality and sincerity on the part of our president, Mondale, and officials met in an attempt to bridge the gap. In light of the circumstances, we can hardly blame the Soviet foreign minister. Andrei Gromyko for not taking these talks too seriously. In the past 41 years, Gromyko has been called "an old hand at politics" when it comes to political gamesmanship on the part of presidential candidates. Considering the sensitive nature of foreign relations, President Reagan should draw a line between his campaigning and his duties as president. Although it is understandable that American people, will give any substance to anything he says one month before elections. His attempt to make contact with the Soviets at this time can only be seen by all involved as a calculated move.

We question the motives of Reagan and Mondale. ‘Consumer Guide’ provides assistance

What's here at Highline?

Registration is over. Days are settling into a routine and it's time to see what else Highline Community College has to offer.

For the new student, this could be a little overwhelming. Where to start? This "Consumer's Guide to Highline" may provide some assistance. For additional information, there are pamphlets available on these and other topics. Students will find information displays in the upper lobby of building 6, and in the Student Activities Office above the Cafeteria. Welcome to Highline!

Getting the best advice

By GLORIA KASE

The advising program at Highline offers the students help in planning for educational and career goals. Advising and educational planning may begin prior to admission and continue through the student's stay at HCC.

When students are accepted into a specific program, they are assigned a faculty advisor. If they're undecided as to their course of study, they may select their own advisor. Students work with the same advisor throughout their stay at Highline, but a student may request a change of advisors at any time in the Counseling Center Office in building 6. It is to the student's advantage to choose an advisor knowledgeable in his or her chosen field, because of contacts for internships, job placements and current information on transfer credits to other schools.

All full-time faculty serve as advisors. They keep regularly scheduled office hours each quarter. Students should meet periodically with their advisor to review performance, plan quarterly schedules and discuss current information about degrees and programs.

The counselors in the Advising Resource Center (building 6, upper level) are the student's initial contact. Students should consult their faculty advisors, not the resource center counselors for general consultation. They may refer students to the advising resource center counselors when such a problem arises. The Counselors are available to meet for 15 minutes maximum, general consultation. They may refer students to other campus resources and services.

Students have the final responsibility for their educational decisions. Neglecting to select an advisor is a disadvantage to students and may result in problems such as delaying registration for classes or making the mistake of taking classes that do not apply to their program or personal goals.

Parking can be a big challenge

By DARRIN TENNSON

Well, these questions aren't unfamiliar to us battle-scarred veterans. As a matter of fact, these were some of the same questions I was asking at this time last year.

First and foremost, before you park anywhere on campus you must have a parking sticker. Parking stickers are available in the security office, which is on the lower floor of building 6.

Your choice of parking lots is: the east lot, located just off 240th; the south lot, also off of 240th; the north lot (which can be entered by driving to the end of the east lot and going downhill or driving down 240th to 200th Avenue South and turning right); and Melville Drive In. Parking stickers are required for all of these areas.

Returning students may have noticed the vast amount of new space in the newly refurbished south parking lot. The money to build the new lot was appropriated from parking fees accumulated over the years starting from Highline's opening in 1961.

Heaven a blessing but Paper Dolls should be cut

by ANDREW SCHAUER

Along with the usual return of school and the opening of the 1984-85 season comes with it a new batch of prime time serials. After the summer's disappearance, there is the increasing demand for indoor entertainment. How ever, the majority of these shows tend to offer little in terms of innovative producing as they appear old. But commercially successful ideas into the market place, and with the latest selection following similar guidelines, are not up for choosing from the same tired, TV clone without structure and less believable characters.

Two of the more heavily-promoted new series were recently seen in London, Paper Dolls, and associated with establishment names in filmmaking and above-caring potential to receive high and illustrated ratings.

THE GOOD NEWS...

Highway to Heaven marks Michael Landon's return to television, and after Little House on the Prairie, finally left the air with a series of some 200 episodes. Landon plays the lead role of Jonathan Smith, a death-row inmate who is brought back to life by God to earn his sins. Smith's role as Jonathan Smith, or as he is known in the television series, "Is a Wonderful Life!" is a premier choice for any actor looking for success. The series on the CBS prime time slot, has done well and continues to attract an audience of viewers. Repo Man takes comedy seriously

by MATT CHIENG

Take a Los Angeles suburban parking lot and add a car which is inhabited by an alien in the trunk of a '64 Chevy Malibu, a clash of social commentary, post-apocalyptic survival, and you will have Universal Picture's soon-to-be cult classic film, Repo Man.

Written and directed by former "repo man" Alex Cox, the film follows the exploits and adventures of Otto, a Los Angeles punker, in the space of one day. Otto loses his job and his girlfriend, while wandering around mulling over the unfortunate turn of events in his life. Otto meets Bud, a crusty professional "repo man," and Otto masts Bud. While wandering around, Bud cons Otto into stealing his first car. Otto is less than pleased when he finds out, but not having anything else going for him, he goes to work with Bud. What follows is a bizarre series of repossession stalemate between Bud and Co., the most important of which is a stolen, personalized '64 Chevy with a $30,000 bounty on it. The catch is that the car is also being pursued by the government, UFO cultists, and competing repo men. Confused? You should be.

In addition to the basic story line, writer/director Cox has included almost self-contained sci-fi, political, religious, and romantic scenes poking fun at the many stereotypes of American life and people. Special attention is given to crime and criminal, generic food, television evangelism, strange fashions and music. However, Cox does a good job of stringing all this together with the story.

Rogers adapting to new Husky role

The following weekend, Rogers decided to return to California, hoping to make it to a couple of Southern California games, since he had not been able to travel during the regular season. He arrived in Los Angeles and was greeted by his family, who helped him settle into a hotel near the game. Despite the late start, he was able to watch the game and analyze his performance. He was impressed by the Huskies' defense and was determined to improve his own game. He practiced hard and was ready for the next game, where he hoped to make a difference on the field.

Rogers is now adapting to his new role on the Husky football team. He has been working hard at his new position, studying the playbook and working on his technique. He is determined to make contributions to the team and is looking forward to the next game. He is grateful for the opportunity to play for the Huskies and is excited about the season. He hopes to help his team win and make a name for himself in college football.
