WHAT WE DO

We don't just help with English assignments; our consultants are excellent at helping writers from many different classes and styles. They act as experienced readers and writing mentors, and they give suggestions to help you improve as a writer.

Whether a student needs help understanding an assignment, developing ideas, revising a paper using faculty feedback, or addressing grammar issues, the consultant will have a conversation with you and help you develop strategies for completing the current piece of writing as well as support to improve your writing overall.

The consultant will not "fix" your paper for you. Learning happens over time, and the consultant will support you through your progress rather than doing the work for you.

WANT TO BECOME A CONSULTANT?

Highline is one of the few colleges in the nation that offers national CRLA Tutoring Certification.

OUR STAFF

We strive to make our staff as diverse as Highline's student body.

Our staff consists of accomplished student writers who are both native and non-native English speakers. We actively seek to hire students from diverse backgrounds because we believe we are all improved by hearing multicultural voices.

SERVICES FOR STUDENTS

We support student writers in a variety of ways.

One-on-one consultations

Students can schedule either 25- or 50-minute consultations with a writing consultant. They may have up to 2 total hours of consultation each week.

Workshops

Each week, consultants also lead workshops about specific writing topics, such as sentence structure, source documentation, and self-assessment. These workshops are group-based and hands-on.

The Writing Center requires appointments.

Make an appointment at writingcenter.highline.edu.

Our consultants have been successful in writing classes and demonstrate strong writing and interpersonal skills. To fill out an application, visit writingcenter.highline.edu/become-a-consultant. All consultants are required to participate in weekly training meetings, for which they receive credit.
